Crowd Saves King Edward From Death; Attacker Held

Writer Is Seized Trying to Fire at Monarch During Parade.

Attempt Follows Talk Scoring War

King, Unhurt, Rides On; Journalist Protected From Angry Mob.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, July 16.—King Edward VIII, the world's freest monarch, was saved from assassination today by the prompt intervention of his shocked and outraged subjects.

Andrew Mahon, crippled, middle aged, slightly bald journalist, was jailed for eight days. He was charged with "unlawful possession of a firearm with intent to endanger life." An Irishman with what he considered a grievance against British justice, he pointed a revolver at his majesty at 12:21 p. m. today and then hurled the unfired gun at the King's richly caparisoned mount as he was seized.

Newspapers and officials were unable to agree whether the assailant was correctly named George Andrew Mahon, George Andrew McMahon or Jerome Bannigan. He was called Mahon for the most part and so booked at the Bow Street Court. Scotland Yard officials said they were continuing to determine the assailant's identity definitely and to decide just who prevented him from shooting the King.

The attempt on the King's life occurred only a few minutes after he had made a stirring speech before six battalions of England's most famous guards regiments, the flower of the British army.

At Head of Parade.

"Humanity cries for peace," his majesty said before taking his place at the head of 6,000 troops in a procession down Constitution Hill, a short, tree-lined avenue, to Buckingham Palace.

Surging throngs were cheering the King wildly after he presented colors to the guards amidst scenes of pomp and splendor in Hyde Park.

Then Mahon, until now an inconspicious figure among thousands, pointed his gun. It had not been fired for some time, the police and Scotland Yard established. But all but one of the chambers were loaded.

A "woman in gray" and scores of bystanders jumped on Mahon. He threw the gun. It struck the flank of the King's charger, a huge brown horse named Cobham.

The horse reared and pranced but was quickly brought back into steady march by the amazed but cool King.

The Duke of York, riding immediately behind his majesty, saw the entire incident.

Equerry Investigates.

Gravely, the King spoke to his equerry, Major Sir John Aird, who was riding nearby. Sir John returned to where officers were protecting Mahon from the infuriated crowds and, after speaking to a mounted policeman, rejoined the procession.

"It was loaded, too," he said in amazement to another equerry, Maj. Gen. Fergison Brooke.

The King turned once in his saddle, looked back and continued to lead the procession to Buckingham Palace.

There was a terrific scuffle with Mahon on the pavement. A mounted policeman galloped to the opposite side of the road, dismounted in a flash and picked up the glittering, nickel-plated gun. Mahon, saved by the police from the crowd, was held in the grip of five constables. He was placed in a car between two detectives, rushed to the Hyde Park Police Station and then to Scotland Yard for interrogation.

Later he was arraigned at Bow street, where he was ordered remanded for eight days, during which mental and physical examinations will be made.

The King, repeatedly saluting his

Son of Ex-Justice And Three Others Saved From Skiff

Adolph Hoehling III, son of Adolph Hoehling, jr., retired District Supreme Court justice, of 5 Newlands street, Chevy Chase, Md., was among four young vacationists at the summer colony in Gloucester, Mass., rescued yesterday after a skiff they occupied was on the verge of sinking.

The party had boarded a 25-foot sloop, and when it sprang a leak, they got in the skiff.

The water crept around them, but when all hope seemed gone, they were picked up by the motor yacht Romany Girl and brought ashore.

Other members of young Hoehling's party, the United Press reported, were Margaret Baker and Harry Clark, both of Worcester, Mass., and Mary Duprey, said to be of Philadelphia.

The Romany Girl, a party boat, in command of Charles McPhee, of Gloucester, was attracted to the scene by distress signals.

Coast Guards later towed the disabled sloop ashore.

This dramatic photo radioed from London was taken a few seconds after a small, middle-aged woman dressed in gray had helped save King Edward VIII's life by knocking a pistol from the hand of a would-be assassin. This picture was taken before most of the nearby spectators knew what had happened. Small arrow points to assailant, George Andrew Mahon, being seized by two bobbies, and a soldier, as the King, shown by other arrow, stiffens in his saddle and rides on.

Secret Service Agents Called In 'Spying' Case

2 Western Operatives Here to Tell of Activities Against Hoover Men.

The Treasury Department last night ordered certain Secret Service agents in Chicago and St. Paul to proceed here at once for questioning on their reported "investigations" of the activities of the Department of Justice agents.

Assistant Secret Service Chief Joseph Murphy, now in Los Angeles, and Grady Boatwright, agent in charge at St. Paul, were summoned here. The names of the "investigators" were withheld.

"Apparently it was just curiosity on the part of several of the men," said W. H. McReynolds, assistant to Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr.

Had no Authority.

"Anything that was done by these agents was without our knowledge and permission. The Secret Service has no authority whatever to be engaging in such investigations."

The latest inter-department teapot tempest began day before yesterday when Attorney General Homer Cummings vigorously warned the Secret Service against investigating the activities of J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and his agents.

Just as vigorously the Treasury Department and the Secret Service officials denied such activity. Secret Service Chief William H. Moran said: "There's nothing to it."

Then, as reports came in from Chicago and St. Paul, Mr. McReynolds talked the matter over yesterday morning by phone with Assistant Secret Service Chief Murphy. He then said:

"We are all horrified about this. Murphy said he was horrified to learn that anything he might have said had been misconstrued by the agents."

Individual Action Hinted.

This was considered tantamount to an admission that there had been some individual activities by the Treasury men in spying on the Justice men.

"If the incidents reported are true, and we are checking on them now, due apologies will be made."

Attorney General Cummings may not be satisfied with a mere apology, it was hinted in the Department of Justice. The Justice Department agents and Hoover are particular favorites of the Attorney General, it is well known, and criticism of them angers him considerably.

One Treasury spokesman yesterday held that the inquiries made by the Secret Service had been limited to a few questions "here and there" to discover whether it was true that the Department of Justice agents were shooting Dillinger's known friends and accomplices on sight, rather than trying to capture them alive. The shooting of Eddie Green by Department of Justice men, was held a case in point.

Queen Ascends to Gypsy Eden As Ragged Followers Mourn

Ruby, Her Majesty of the Open Road, Passes Away at Alexandria Hospital While King John and Retainers Stand in Stricken Silence.

Tragedy, like sudden clouds, obscured the Romany moon in Alexandria last night.

For Ruby Mitchell, 48-year-old queen of a tribe of Gypsies on their carefree way from Charlotte, N. C., to California, is dead.

Queen Ruby, whose life, with that of her followers, was the open road, the happiness of the highway and nomadic trails and starlight, died beneath an oxygen tent in Alexandria Hospital shortly after 9 p. m.

When the end came she was surrounded by a group of those high in tribal councils, including her husband, John Mitchell, who shared her nomadic throne with her.

There were no royal robes on the aristocrats of the tribe that mourned Queen Ruby's passing last night.

They wore, for the most part, patched and ragged clothing, with here and there a bandanna protruding from a hip pocket.

Throughout the sultry summer day these rugged men and women, children of the sun and nature, who had followed the queen in life, had waited for her to die.

They felt that she could not live. Hadn't the physicians shaken their heads and said there was little chance that she might once more take her place beside King John in the happy jaunty land of the roadways.

King John himself had bowed his head and said so. He knelt beside her curiously neat and white bed. His followers did likewise until hospital officials objected, and threatened to have the police evict all but the husband.

And, across the street, on the spa-

Louis Murphy, Iowa Senator, Killed in Auto

Wife, Two Others Injured When Tire Fails, Turning Car Over.

By the Associated Press.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., July 16.—United States Senator Louis Murphy, of Iowa, was killed and his wife and two other persons were injured in an automobile accident near Bloomer, north of here, today.

Mrs. Murphy was brought to a hospital here, where Dr. J. A. Kelly, of Bloomer, said she was suffering from shock and a possible rib injury.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Woodward, of Dubuque, who were riding with the Murphys, were treated at Bloomer for bruises.

Mrs. Murphy told Dr. Kelly that a front tire of the car blew out, and that after skidding off the road, the machine overturned.

Senator Murphy, who was driving, was crushed against the steering wheel, dying instantly.

Woodward is publisher of the Dubuque Telegraph-Herald.

The Murphys and Woodwards had been vacationing near Hayward, Wis., and were returning home at the time of the accident.

The Senator lost control of the car after the blowout. Woodward said the car turned over three times.

The Senator's body was brought to a funeral home here. Mr. and Mrs. Woodward and Mrs. Murphy were so shaken up that they made

Three Fliers Die In Air Crashes; 7 Cadets Safe

Orlicz-Dreszer Is Killed in Poland; Knapp, Band Leader, Is Victim.

Two naval reservists were killed yesterday near Murfreesboro, Tenn., when their plane crashed in a field, it was reported by the Navy Department.

In another crash reported by United Press, Orville Knapp, New York dance orchestra leader, was killed when his plane fell from a height of 100 feet as he was taking off from Beverly, Mass., airport.

From Annapolis, Md., it was reported by the Associated Press that a seaplane from the Naval Academy, carrying seven midshipmen and a crew of four was forced down in the lower Potomac, taxiing ashore at Reedville, Va.

The men killed in the Tennessee crash were identified as A. J. Yassay, 31, of Detroit, and Ensign O. W. Lowmaster, of Grosse Point, Mich.

On Way to Detroit.

It was learned at the Navy Department that the men, flying a two-seated fighting ship, were enroute to Detroit from the naval air base at Pensacola where they had gone on training flight.

The plane crashed in flames but the fuselage was not entirely destroyed, according to the Associated Press.

Undertakers said the bodies were badly burned.

The crash occurred sometime before noon during storms accompanied by wind and lighting.

The plane hurtled ino a field behind a barn on the farm of J. W. Knott. Apparently there were no witnesses to the crash. The ambulance driver reported it was first discovered when Knott and other farmers saw flames and went to investigate.

They found the bodies of the two men thrown clear of the wreckage.

Knapp, the victim of the Beverly crash, who recently was married to Miss Gloria Grafton, of the stage production "Jumbo," was alone in the plane when it crashed.

Identification was established tentatively by officials at nearby East Boston airport.

Practice Landings.

The orchestra leader, Beverly airport attaches said, had arrived there in his own plane five minutes previously. He was piloting a wasp motor Stearman type ship. Before taking off Knapp said he was to practice landings, according to attendants.

The seven midshipmen, who were aboard a Naval Academy seaplane forced down by engine trouble, re-

Speed Case May Solve Policing Of No Man's Land Near Airport

A test case involving jurisdiction of "no man's land," the heavily trafficked area flanking Washington Airport which both Virginia and the District claim but neither will police, will be called in Traffic Court today.

Seeking to bring order out of a chaotic situation which has proved too complex for the United States Supreme Court and a special commission named by Congress to solve the muddle, a park policeman is scheduled to testify this morning that he timed a motorist at 38 miles an hour on the old Alexandria pike, also know as route No. 1.

The alleged speedster, a salesman, was given a ticket yesterday by Policeman E. S. Mast just as the former was approaching Highway Bridge en route to Washington.

A week ago park police installed signs along the disputed road proclaiming a 22-mile speed limit. Action was taken as the result of complaints by James E. Colliflower, president of the coal company bearing his name. One of the firm's yards is located just off the highway.

"I don't care who polices the road," he said last night, "so long as someone is responsible. At present it is a race track and there have been many accidents. The excessive speeding seriously interferes with our work and is extremely dangerous."

Capt. Patrick J. Carroll, chief of park police, is simply interested in finding out whether his force has

Spy Suspect Pleads Case, Denies Deals

Was Only Seeking Job as Flying Instructor, Farnsworth Says.

Wrote to Six Nations Asking Work, He Tells Post Reporter.

By Samuel Lubell.

Stretched on his narrow cot in his cell in the infirmary of the District Jail, clad only in a thin, quarter-sleeved nightgown, and puffing nervously at a cigarette, former Lieut. Comdr. John S. Farnsworth told his own story yesterday of how he came to be accused of selling naval secrets to the Japanese.

He denied having confessed to Department of Justice agents, saying that the only paper he signed under their questioning was an "explanation of my side of the case"—how he had tried, after he was court-martialed out of the Navy nine years ago, to stage a comeback by securing employment in the aeronautical organizations of Japan and other foreign powers.

In this explanation, he said, he admitted having given a batch of Navy photographs to a member of the staff of the Japanese Embassy here in Washington, but called "untrue" the report he had confessed to turning over to the Japanese agent a copy of "Service and Information and Security," a confidential manual of fleet tactics.

Contacted Five Governments.

Before starting negotiations "for a job" with a member of the staff of the Japanese Embassy, he revealed, he sought a position as an aeronautic adviser with the Argentine, Peruvian, Brazilian, Chinese and Russian governments, the latter through the Amtorg Agency in New York City. Both the Russians and Chinese refused his offer, he said, but he had no word from the embassies of the other countries.

The proposal that he made to the Japanese government, he said, was to serve as a flying instructor. For his services he demanded $30,000 as a cash down payment and a commission and salary of commander in the Japanese Navy, with the proviso that in case of war with the United States he would be "put on the shelf."

The negotiations however fell through, the ex-naval officer declared, "and not a cent was paid to me." The name of the member of the Japanese Embassy with whom he had his dealings, Farnsworth said, was known to the Department of Justice and the Navy Department.

Loses Hope of Bail.

All hope Farnsworth had of raising the $10,000 bail in which he is being held seeme shattered yesterday when his cousin, Ward Farnsworth, a Chicago real estate broker, upon whom the naval officer had been relying, visited him and said that he thought "John is better off when he is than out in the streets."

Following his visit, the cousin prepared a statement in which he described the former officer's physical and mental condition as "one of complete collapse" and indicated that the defense the Farnsworth family will pursue is that the accused officer has been irresponsible ever since he was knocked unconscious in the crash of an airplane in Pensacola Bay in 1926.

Although Commissioner Needham C. Turnage, before whom Farnsworth was arraigned, has set July 29 as the date of his preliminary hearing, a grand jury indictment is expected to be sought against the officer early next week. All the evidence in the possession of the Department of Justice has already been revealed to the United States district attorney and the two offices have been conferring regularly on the best means of going ahead with indictment proceedings.

Farnsworth had just finished taking a bath when this reporter was ushered into his two-bed cell in the second-floor infirmary of the jail, and seemed fairly composed and rested. That is, composed and rested, compared to the trembling state he was in at his arraignment Tuesday morning when he hesitantly pleaded not guilty.

As he told his story, the 43-year-old former naval officer repeatedly tugged nervously at his chin, ran his fingers through his prematurely-

Gen. Lejeune Arrives in Capital For Second Division's Reunion

With a welcoming delegation swarming around him, pumping his hand, slapping his back and pausing on the Union Station platform every few seconds to set up an organized cheer, Maj. Gen. John A. Lejeune, one of the war-time commanders of the Second Division, came back last night to the men who served under him in France.

The general arrived as the eighteenth annual reunion of the Second Division was getting under way at the Hotel Willard. More than 1,500 veterans had registered last night, others were pouring in and it was estimated that by Saturday nearly 4,000 would be on hand.

The welcome that the Second Division men gave their general was in no way one-sided. Grinning as he greeted the one-time buck privates, the general said, "I just came back to see the boys."

The "boys," some of them limping, others with empty khaki sleeves pinned to their sides, held Gen. Lejeune on the platform for fully 20 minutes. "He's the same old Johnny," they said. "He's the same old John." Then they let Gen. Hugh Matthews, head of the Marine Quartermaster Corps, and Col. G. A. Herbst, secretary of the Second Division Association, escort Gen. Lejeune to his car.

Alumni of Virginia Military Institute, where Gen. Lejeune is now superintendent, formed an additional welcoming delegation.

Gen Lejeune, one-time commandant of the Marine Corps, took command of the Second Division in

Townsend, Coughlin To Join in Stump Tour Of Country for Lemke

THE REV. CHARLES E. COUGHLIN.

Gomer Smith's Ouster Ordered by Founder of Pension Group.

President a Liar, Radio Priest Says

Cleric Tears Off Coat, Collar as He Blasts at Roosevelt.

By Felix Bruner.

A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, July 16.—The Townsend old-age pension organization, in convention here, divided into two warring camps tonight over the indorsement of a third party, the attitude of the organization toward President Roosevelt and personal rivalries within the directorate.

An inflammatory speech by the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, who denounced the New Deal in fighting language, added to the difficulties.

However, out of the turmoil came the announcement by Dr. Francis E. Townsend that he, Father Coughlin, the Rev. Gerald K. Smith and Representative William Lemke will make a combined speaking tour in the interest of Lemke, Presidential candidate of the new Union Party.

Dr. Townsend said that the four, constituting the heads of the pension movement, the National Union for Social Justice, the Huey Long share-the-wealth movement, and the Union Party, probably will visit New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans and possibly San Francisco, all speaking at the same meeting. Dates have not been arranged.

The board of 15 directors, which theoretically controls the organization, met for two hours tonight to consider the demand of Dr. Townsend that Gomer Smith, of Oklahome, vice president and member of the board, be ousted. Townsend's demand followed a speech by Smith before the convention in which he indorsed President Roosevelt and made a fiery attack upon Gerald Smith, former leader in the Huey Long movement and now chief lieutenant of Townsend.

Fail to Take Action.

After prolonged discussion, in which the directors were sharply divided, the meeting broke up without taking action. The official explanation was that the directors had tried to reach Gomer Smith by telephone and, having failed, decided not to act immediately. The fight is expected to be taken to the floor of the convention, where the autocratic rule of Townsend may be challenged.

The audience, which packed the huge Cleveland Auditorium, heard Townsendites call each other names and saw Father Coughlin tear off his coat and his clerical collar as he shouted that President Roosevelt was a double-crosser and a liar." The crowd, which was viewing far the best show of the year, yelled itself hoarse, impartially cheering everybody and everything that was said.

Coughlin, with his arm about Dr. Townsend, founder of the old-age pension movement, told the 10,000 delegates that their leader had "indorsed Bill Lemke and Tom O'Brien, the Union Party candidates."

"How many of you will follow Dr. Townsend?" he yelled.

With a mighty cheer, nearly every man and woman stood.

It looked like a unanimous indorsement of the Union Party, but in not more than 10 minutes the crowd was cheering almost as loudly the plea of the Rev. Clinton Wunder, Townsend leader, that candidates who work for the Townsend cause be indorsed regardless of party.

Cheers Roosevelt Backer.

Almost as loudly, three hours later, the crowd cheered a ringing defense of President Roosevelt by Gomer Smith, Oklahoma Townsend leader and defeated candidate for the United States Senate. It cheered almost as loudly a lurid denunciation by Gomer Smith of both Father Coughlin and Gerald Smith.

While on the surface the convention is charged with strife and bad feeling, the growing animosity behind the scenes is even more serious. It is becoming rapidly apparent that the Townsend movement cannot be a serious factor in any third party. Lemke is due to speak here Sunday. Townsend leaders have reached the point where they

Landon Visitors Say Candidates Have No Racial, Religious Bias

Both Roosevelt, G. O. P. Nominee Free From Prejudice, Declare Rabbi and Companion; Ely Gives Support to Kansan in Campaign.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., July 16.—Rabbi Samuel S. Mayerberg and Joseph Cohen, of Kansas City, after visiting Gov. Alf M. Landon here yesterday, issued a statement that both President Roosevelt and Gov. Landon, the two Presidential nominees, were free from racial and religious prejudice and urged both Jews and gentiles to vote upon the basis of national issues.

Other Landon visitors included Miss Agnes Samuelson, Des Moines, National Education Association vice president, who said Landon's interest in rural schools was "splendid;" W. R. Hopkins, former Cleveland city manager, who offered his support, and Martin A. Nelson, Republican candidate for Governor in Minnesota.

Eugene Meyer, Washington publisher and governor of the Federal Reserve Board under President Hoover, said, after conferring with Gov. Landon today, that "a very close fight" is in prospect in the Presidential campaign.

Meyer told newsmen, after lunching with the Republican nominee,

Broker's Wife Is Found Guilty; To Die in Chair

Mrs. Bolton to Be First Woman Electrocuted in Chicago.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 16.—Deliberating only 42 minutes, a criminal court jury late today convicted Mrs. Mildred Mary Bolton of murdering her husband and decreed she become the first woman to die in the Cook County electric chair.

Eleven married men and one widower comprised the jury which heard two witnesses quote Mrs. Bolton as saying:

"They just don't convict women of murder in Cook County."

First Assistant State's Attorney Wilbert F. Crowley drummed on this testimony in demanding the extreme penalty for the 46-year-old widow, whose stoical attitude—even when the death verdict was read—had surprised the audiences which packed the courtroom since the trial began Monday.

"Say to the world with your verdict that women do get convicted of

Mrs. Creighton And Applegate Die in Sing Sing

Woman Wheeled to Chair, Unconscious; Suitor Denies Poisoning.

By the United Press.

Sing Sing Prison, Ossining, N. Y., July 16.—Mrs. Mary Frances Creighton rode to a horrible death tonight in a wheel chair but she knew nothing of it.

The flabby, 37-year-old woman, who twice had been acquitted of poison murders, was electrocuted at 11:07 p. m. for the poison death of Mrs. Ada Applegate in the Long Island town of Baldwin last fall.

When the inert hulk that a few minutes before had been a wife and mother was rolled out on a morgue table, her former suitor, Everett C. Applegate, husband of the murdered woman, followed her to the electric chair.

They were convicted jointly of murdering Applegate's 300-pound wife so that Applegate would be free to marry Ruth Creighton, the woman Borgia's 15-year-old daughter. Applegate admittedly seduced the child after he tired of her mother.

Unconscious at Death.

Mrs. Creighton gave no slightest sign of life or consciousness when she was brought into the execution chamber in a wheel chair. The 24 official witnesses, 22 of them newspapermen, agreed that she was completely unconscious.

Mrs. Creighton was baptized in the Roman Catholic faith by the Rev. Father John P. McCaffrey, prison chaplain, a short time before she was executed.

The service was performed in her cell in the death house. When she was received at the prison she listed herself as a protestant.

Applegate, who had maintained his innocence throughout, made this statement:

"Before I die, I say I am innocent of this crime. May God have mercy on my soul."

Mrs. Applegate died last fall in the home where the Applegates and Creightons lived together. Neighborhood gossip of the tangled relationships of the two families, allegedly spread when Ruth Creighton boasted to schoolmates that she had been intimate with Applegate,

Moley Praises Public Opinion Institute Polls

Scientific, Accurate and Honest, Asserts Editor; Warns Democrats.

High praise for the honesty, the science and the accuracy of the America Speaks polls of the Institute of Public Opinion, being published in The Washington Post, came yesterday from Raymond Moley, former Assistant Secretary of State in the Roosevelt Administration.

In an editorial in the current issue of the magazine Today, of which he now is editor, Moley, formerly frequently referred to as "Brain Truster No. 1," comments especially on the results of the poll published last Sunday, showing the Roosevelt popular vote reduced to 51.8 per cent and with a majority of the electoral vote in the Landon column.

He comments that if the Democrats "do not deceive themselves," the polls, being conducted by Dr. George Gallup, will influence the future strategy of the ruling party.

The editorial says:

"The first Landon-Roosevelt poll published by Dr. Gallup's Institute of Public Opinion provides the unexpected news that sentiment in this country is about evenly divided between the two candidates for President.

Praises Honesty.

"After personal study of Dr. Gallup's methods, I am convinced that his polls are scrupulously honest and as scientific as present knowledge can make them. Their accuracy has been proved on a number of occasions in the past. They are better indications of public opinion than the Literary Digest poll, for reasons too technical and numerous to set forth here.

"The Gallup poll of last Sunday shows that the popularity of President Roosevelt has dropped from 55.8 to 51.8 in one month; that 13 States are safe for Landon and that eight more are for Landon by a narrow margin; that 24 States are safe for Roosevelt and three more States are for Roosevelt by a narrow margin. On this basis, Landon would receive 272 electoral votes as against Roosevelt's 259. It takes 266 to elect.

"But in any straw vote the important thing to note is the trend of public opinion. The Gallup poll shows a sharp Nation-wide swing away from Roosevelt. In only seven States has there been a gain in his poularity.

Cites Middle West.

"In the Middle West, the real battleground of this campaign, there has been a general subsidence in the pro-Roosevelt sentiment. Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and South Dakota, which a month ago were doubtful States, are now decisively for Landon. Minnesota, Illinois and Indiana are for Landon by a narrow margin. This poll did not register Lemke votes. But it seems probable at this time that Lemke will get enough votes in the doubtful States of Minnesota, Michigan and Ohio to put them definitely into the Landon group in next month's poll.

"Polls are not elections. Nevertheless they not only reflect a changing situation, but themselves influence changes in sentiment.

"Whether this startling indication of Landon's strength will influence the future strategy of the Democrats remains to be seen. If they do not deceive themselves, it will. It seemed to thoughtful people that the warlike note struck in Philadelphia, which could only be interpreted as the assurance of a continuation of leftist reform, was unsound politically because the country was temporarily tired of reform. The Gallup poll provides impartial evidence to support the wisdom of that judgment."

Harbord to Arrive Today.

The other two wartime commanders of the division are Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, who will arrive for the reunion today, and Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy, now ill in Walter Reed Hospital.

The veterans gathered at the Willard last night for an informal reunion program, which included a dance, a floor show, and a concert by the Marine Band. Music for the dance was furnished by the Navy Band Orchestra.

Many of the veterans have brought their wives with them, others have brought sons and daughters now as old as they themselves were when they enlisted.

The floor show last night was arranged by Dr. Charles W. Tegge, head of the local chapter, and a committee headed by Police Lieut. Thomas Mason.

The program for today includes a visit to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington this morning. Frank J. Bart, Medal of Honor man and former private in Company C of the Ninth Infantry, has been chosen to lay a wreath on the tomb. In the evening there will be a dance at the Willard with music by the Marine Band orchestra.

To Be Interviewed.

At 4 p. m. today 12 men of the division, chosen at random, will be interviewed over station WRC by Ted Kimball, N. B. C. announcer.

Tomorrow, the last day of the reunion, will be featured by the dedication of Second Division Memorial on the Ellipse. The dedication address, to be made by Maj. Gen. Harbord, will be broadcast.

The dedication exercises will include the massing of regimental colors and a 21-gun salute to the 4,200 dead of the division.

The annual business meeting will be held at 9:30 a. m. The reunion concludes tomorrow night with the annual dinner at the Willard.

Target of Assassins.

Politics and People

Newspapers Leaning Over Backwards to Be Fair in Reporting of Campaign.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Mr. Waltman's column today consists of an extract from an open forum address on the "Responsibilities of the Press in a Democracy," which he delivered yesterday before the Institute of Public Affairs of the University of Virginia.

I BELIEVE that the corps of Washington newspaper correspondents, who are the real moulders of public opinion in regard to National politics and affairs, has sincerely tried to do its job well and against great difficulties. The stock market crash of 1929 forced to the front many technical problems and questions strange to these writers. They have striven courageously and intelligently, may I assert, to master the intricacies of these problems in order not only that they could understand them, but so that they could present and discuss them in a manner easily understood by the readers of their newspapers who lacked specialized knowledge or training.

WALTMAN.

As an illustration: The time was not long ago when the activities of so technical an agency as the Governors of the Federal Reserve System were of interest only to bankers, financiers and those who pursued such subjects from an academic viewpoint. The news of that agency prior to the depression seldom was found in any place but on the financial pages of the daily newspaper or in periodicals devoted solely to finance.

But experience had demonstrated that the decisions and policies of the Federal Reserve authorities frequently affected the lives of the lowliest among us. The press of this country undertook to popularize the significance of such terms as "excess reserves," "open market operations" and "credit inflation"—terms which previously seldom were heard outside of the counting room—and so today the important decisions—or lack of decisions—of the Federal Reserve authorities have become front-page news.

This was not done for the benefit of the so-called money power or the Wall Street bankers, for they had other access to the facts of what was transpiring. It was done to enlighten the man in the street, to enable him to have a more intelligent understanding of the forces at work in this Nation which affect his livelihood and his happiness—and that, may I say, is an illustration in which the American press has lived up to its responsibilities in a democracy.

And that is but one of many illustrations which could be cited. So it was with the momentous banking legislation which became necessary during recent years; with the innovations undertaken in our monetary system; with the Supreme Court decisions invalidating many of the New Deal acts and raising questions of the greatest and most vital importance to the functioning of our democracy. Not only did the American press give to its readers the information of what had been done—frequently presenting the complete text of important documents for the benefit of those desiring all details—but it presented interpretations by competent writers of the significance of such actions and the reasons why some opposed them and others advocated them.

In the field of labor relations the American press in the last four years has bounded forward, presenting in many instances in the most detailed accounts the issues between employer and employe. Statements and speeches of labor leaders have been presented at great length in newspapers owned and edited by men who thoroughly disagreed with most of the contents of such statements and speeches. Such is a tolerance that is necessary to and compatible with a democracy.

Most of our newspapers, I believe, have entered into the present Presidential campaign with a determination to be fair and objective in the presentation of the news and to maintain a tolerance of opinion, irrespective of the partisan leaning of the paper's editorial columns. This was demonstrated during the two national conventions. Many Republican newspapers were far more critical of what transpired at Cleveland than was the Democratic press and many Democratic newspapers were harsher in their denunciation of the inane meeting held at Philadelphia than were those newspapers with Republican leanings.

Indeed, if most of our newspapers were to be criticized at all over their handling of the convention news it would have to be on the score that they leaned over backward in seeking to be tolerant and kindly toward the party to which they were editorially opposed. I think it is a safe statement that never before have so many newspapers, irrespective of political preference, carried the full text of the major speeches delivered at the two political conventions as this year—and may I add that the Associated Press carried and many newspapers printed in full the text of the platform adopted by the convention of the Socialist Party.

I have reason to believe that this desire to present to the people of this country the arguments of the various candidates in this campaign and whatever other information relates to the issues will continue in the major part of the American press until election day. I have been told by colleagues on newspapers ardently supporting the Presidential candidacy of Gov. Alf M. Landon that they proposed to lean over backward in presenting every important fact and argument projected by President Roosevelt and the Democrats. Many newspapers favoring the re-election of President Roosevelt propose to follow a similar policy in regard to the Republican candidate. Their contention is that the welfare of the country will best be served by keeping the discussion alive and virile.

I believe the greatest service rendered the democratic idea and this Nation in recent years was the part which the American press played, almost single-handedly, in the early part of the New Deal in keeping alive the spirit of discussion. Normally the opposition party to that in power forces debate and discussion of whatever program is projected. But so badly defeated had the Republicans been in 1932 and again in 1934; so demoralized and dispirited had they become, that they abandoned the responsibility which rests on the minority party under our form of government to scrutinize and to challenge whatever is proposed by the majority. As far as they were concerned, the battle went on every issue in those early days to the New Deal by default.

It was the press of this country—both Democratic and Republican—which called a halt on the inexcusable haste and indifference with which measures of far-reaching effect were being adopted by our Congress on recommendation of the Executive. Slowly but surely the press of this country forced both the Administration and the Congress to give heed to the deliberative process so necessary in a democracy. It is possible that in those days, we had come close to the brink of a dictatorship in this land. If that is true, then the credit for turning back such forces belongs almost exclusively to the American press—and that alone should be sufficient to wash away many of its sins and transgressions against the democratic idea.

In conclusion may I repeat with concurrence the words of Viscount Bryce, England's brilliant author and diplomat: "The clash and conflict of argument bring out the strength and weakness of every case, and that which is sound tends to prevail. Let the cynics say what they will, man is not an irrational animal. Truth usually wins in the long run, though the obsessions of self-interest or prejudice or ignorance may long delay its victory."

Costlier Food Feared in Wake Of Ruined Crop

Supplies Likely to Be One Per Cent Less Than in Last Drought.

By Sidney Olson.

One of the major calamities of the drought which yesterday scorched through its fourteenth day of crop-killing temperatures will be Mrs. America's grocery bill this fall and winter, it appeared yesterday from a study of the situation.

The Agriculture Department published a national food survey that showed prospetcive food supplies of the country would be 1 per cent less than those for 1934-35, the year of the worst drought in the country's history.

Yesterday's weather forecasts for the drought area held no relief in sight for the corn belt, where a disaster greater than that of 1934 is looming larger every day without rain.

The country's greatest cash crop continued to wither in the brutal heat. The black drought spots on the Agriculture Department maps of the corn regions were inked a little larger over wider areas. The corn crop is nearing its final deadline. Just before July 1 Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace said the national bread basket could survive in the main if rain came within three weeks.

No showers of consequence have alleviated the terrific heat thus far, and the corn crop already has been wiped out in many counties. The remainder, sucking moisture from subsurface water, has weathered the drought very well, and can be saved with rains in the next few days, crop experts say.

The 14 past days constitute the hottest, driest fortnight in the history of the corn belt, weather records showed.

Food Problem Debated.

The food problem was the center of conflicting estimates. Figures of the department showing that the food supply should be one per cent less than in 1934-35, were coupled with a claim that there would be no actual food scarcity.

Higher prices were outlined for butter, cheese, eggs and the better grades of cattle, while lower prices were said to be prospective for potatoes, hogs, the lower grades of cattle, feeder lambs, poultry and wool.

The statement of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics said:

"All food supplies for domestic consumption and export are expected to be about three per cent less than those of 1935-36 and one per cent less than the food supply of 1934-35."

Developments of Day.

Drought developments during the day included:

Forty-three counties in North Carolina, Georgia and Kentucky were added to the drought black list of emergency counties, making a grand total of 452 in 14 States. The 28 counties in North Carolina brought that State into the drought list for the first time.

The Works Progress Administration announced that on July 13 it had given employment to 22,074 destitute farmers in five drought States—Minnesota, the Dakotas, Montana and Wyoming—primary centers of drought destruction.

The Resettlement Administration announced 41 land-use adjustment projects in operation in Montana, Nebraska, the Dakotas and Wyoming, involving the purchase of about 4,000,000 acres of land for approximately $13,749,000.

U. S. Navy Gains One Warship In 6 Months; Total Now Is 351

By the Associated Press.

The United States Navy—in its evolution toward a modern, treaty-limit sea fighting force by 1942—has made a net gain of one warship and 12,710 tons during the last six months.

An official summary of ships and tonnage in commission made public last night shows that—with the addition of the new heavy cruiser Quincy—the Navy now consists of 351 warships of 1,478,954 tons.

A similar summary on January 1 showed 350 vesseels of 1,466,244 tons in active service.

Warships out of commission, but still considered fit for service in an emergency total 184 of 539,510 tons, a decrease of 31 ships from the 215 of 577,380 tons listed six months ago.

The 31 ships have been scrapped or listed for scrapping as overage and obsolete.

79 Under Construction.

Ships now under construction total 79 of 265,515 tons, as against 84 of 281,870 tons which were under construction on January 1.

The Navy of today consists of the following 351 vessels in commission:

Battleships—15 of 464,300 tons. (The Navy has plans to begin construction of two new battleships to replace those overage whenever the British lay keels for the two new ships they have announced they will build.

Cruisers—16 heavy and 10 light, totaling 222,300 tons.

Aircraft carriers—4 of 92,000 tons.

Destroyers—106 of 124,555 tons.

Submarines—53 of 53,830 tons.

Mine layers and sweepers—26 of 26,480 tons.

Patrol Vessels.

Patrol vessels—36 or 13,340 tons, including nine eagle boats, 14 submarine chasers, 3 gunboats, 8 river gunboats and tw converted yachts.

Auxiliaries—72 of 429,755 tons, including 6 destroyer tenders, 5 submarine tenders, 1 seaplane tender, 9 aircraft tenders, 2 repair ships, 1 floating dry dock, 2 store ships, 8 oilers, 1 ammunition ship, 2 cargo ships, 2 transports, 1 hospital ship, 17 ocean-going tugs, 5 submarine rescue vessels and 10 miscellaneous auxiliaries.

In addition the Navy has 13 unclassified ships of 52,394 tons.

The Navy has 76 destroyers of 84,600 tons out of commission, but "fit for service," making a total—with the ships in commission—of 192 of 209,215 tons.

An additional 51 of 80,350 tons are now under construction.

Under the 1930 naval treaty the United States was limited to 150,000 tons of destroyers. Great Britain's action on Wednesday in invoking the escalator clause of that treaty to keep 40,000 tons of destroyers after December 31, 1936, automaticaly permits the United States to retain the same destroyer tonnage.

Policemen, Bull Chase Each Other

Newton, Mass., July (AP).—Two policemen and a young bull with horns 4 inches long took turns chasing each other through this fashionable suburb today.

Panting pedestrians and screaming school children joined in the alternate advances and retreats through hedges, lawns and flower gardens.

Dragging a looped rope, the policemen overtook the animal as he paused to breakfast on a green lawn. Then the bull charged and the patrolmen fled to their patrol car.

They thought they had the animal cornered later, at a railroad station, but it dashed in one door of the station and out another, while commuters fled in panic.

At last, with the aid of a third man, the policemen threw the bull on the station platform. Then he was led back to the stockyard from which he had escaped.

Gypsy Queen Is Dead

cious lawn of Miss Kroues Ficklin, between 25 and 50 others were congregated, gazing toward Queen Ruby's room in the hospital.

Automobiles whizzed by and the sun grew hotter, with the wind tickling the trees and playing the music Gypsies love to tune their banjoes to.

Then, just as police had received permission from hospital authorities to go as far as they liked in clearing the queen's death chamber, the end came.

The wind seemed to die down, and play no more music through the leafy strings.

King John stood now, slightly stooped, his bronze face wrinkled with sad lines that criss-crossed like the aimless trails Gypsies sometimes follow in sorrow.

"Queen Ruby is dead," he said.

For a moment there was silence in the room. Then there were sobs. Those who waited on the lawn in the darkness heard the word. In weeping groups they filed back to their camp, down the highway, near the Penn Daw Hotel, where their motorized caravan had been parked since the queen had been stricken a week ago.

Presently in the hospital room there was a yellow gleam of candles. The beams fenced back and forth across the queen's still form.

The queen will be accorded a regal funeral. Her body will be embalmed and borne by her sorrowing followers and her widower to Petersburg, Va., for burial.

She was the mother of nine children, and most of them have traveled in the Mitchell tribe.

King John last night wanted desperately to find her son, George.

"He is far away, out on the big prairies in the West," he said. "He is either in Minnesota or North Dakota, and he does not know. I must find him."

Prince George is married to a fortune teller. They travel with a carnival.

The Gypsy camp was bleak with sorrow. Women wailed, men stood in little groups, speaking in low voices and trying to console King John.

No mandolins tinkled. No voices sang songs of the open road and life that seems to go on forever.

Queen Ruby was dead.

Heat Death Toll Soars to 4,200; City Keeps Cool

Half U. S. Remains in Most Prolonged Wave on Record.

Despite scattered showers throughout the Middle West, and the assurance of meteorologists in the Chicago area that relief in a general sense is on the way, more than half the Nation yesterday remained in the throes of what is perhaps the most prolonged heat wave on record—a heat wave which has claimed the Associated Press estimated last night, no less than 4,200 lives.

Washington was comparatively cool, with a maximum temperature of 88 degrees at 3 p. m., and a minimum of 70 at 6 a. m. When the mercury reached its height here yesterday the humidity was relatively low, reading 39.

Gentle breezes from a generally northeast and eastern direction fanned the city as the weather man predicted probable showers for today. No heat prostrations were reported.

For at least two more days, asserted J. R. Lloyd, of the Chicago weather office, no definite alleviation can be expected from the high temperatures.

The highest noon temperature of the season was recorded in Pierre, S. Dak., when 109 degrees was reached.

Other high marks about this hour, the Associated Press recorded, included Aberdeen, S. Dak., 108; Mitchell, S. Dak., 105; Bismarck, N. Dak., 100; Kearney, Nebr., 102; Beatrice, Nebr., 103; Lincoln, Nebr., 105; Falls City, Nebr., 105, and Norfolk, Nebr., 107.

For parts of Illinois, already hard hit, warmer weather again was in store, the Associated Press said.

Western Michigan and most of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys also are due for prolonged heat, as well as the greater portions of the plains States.

A return of 90-to-100 degree readings was predicted for Chicago, where more temperate conditions have prevailed. The first half of July was the driest on record in the Chicago vicinity.

Cool breezes and occasional showers helped Michigan reduce its appalling death rate, but yesterday its total reached 606, second only to Minnesota, with 753.

Officials Knew Mahon Planned Attack on King

Detectives Sent to Guard His Home, but Arrived After He Left.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, July 16.—Police knew in advance that Andrew Mahon intended to make trouble while King Edward VIII led 6,000 of his guardsmen on parade today.

Mahon, the Irishman who brandished a revolver at His Majesty, lived in the basement of a large house in Westbourne terrace, Paddington, a district of London.

Normally he left his home at 8:45 a. m. daily, but today he left at 8:45. At 8 a. m. two detectives arrived and watched the house from the end of the street until 9 a. m. It was 12:21 p. m. when Mahon attempted to shoot the King. The presence of the detectives was evidence that the police had an inkling of impending trouble. They locked Mahon's house this afternoon.

Sued Agitator in April.

Last April, Mahon, giving his name as McMahon, sued Mrs. Violet Vanderelst, wealthy agitator against capital punishment, at Marylebone. He appeared in the county court and asked $210 for the hire of automobiles she used in her last general election campaign at Putney.

The case was dismissed and Mahon asked permission to appeal. The judge refused the petition and Mahon exclaimed:

"That is not justice."

He was ordered to return to the witness stand and apologize to the judge or go to jail for contempt of court. He apologized.

At Bow Street Court today Mahon said:

"It is all the fault of Sir John Simon (secretary of state for home affairs). I wrote to him last night and telephoned to him this morning.

"Only as a Protest."

"Was the King hurt? I did it only as a protest."

The court assigned Alfred Kerstein to act as Mahon's lawyer. He asked Detective Sergeant John Sands:

"You say the revolver was loaded in four chambers I take it the other chamber was not discharged."

Sands, who arraigned Mahon, replied:

"There is no evidence that the revolver had been fired for a considerable time."

Mahon was nervous. He moved his hands about his face and swayed unsteadily on his feet. Kerstein denied emphatically that Mahon attempted to assassinate the King or had any desire to kill His Majesty.

Declared a "Crank."

Britons sighed with relief when they learned that the court evidence tended to indicate that Mahon was nothing more than a "crank" with a grievance such as sometimes causes persons to heave bricks through the windows of 10 Downing street, official residence of the Prime Minister, or call at Buckingham Palace, claiming that they are the rightful King of England.

The affair, however, brought home to the public, probably for the first time, the risks that British royalty can and do run.

While excitement over the affair probably will die down until Mahon's next hearing, it was pointed out that the public should accept that the Irishman was suffering from a grievance, real or imaginary.

Kerstein has asked for a mental examination of Mahon. He described his client's condition as "jittery."

Ex-Newspaper Editor.

Mahon recently was editor of a newspaper called the Human Gazette. He described himself in court as a journalist. He will be examined as to his mental condition before appearing for another hearing in eight days.

Immediately after the Bow Street Court hearing the King called for a report on the whole incident from his personal police officer, Chief Inspector Storrier.

Full details were given to His Majesty.

The King, entirely unperturbed, expressed the wish that court proceedings minimize his own association with the incident as much as possible.

A record of the Bow Street proceedings was placed in the hands of the King.

Teacher Slashed; Man's Body Found

Grayling, Mich., July 16 (AP).—Miss Rachel Crume, 21, of Findlay, Ohio, was clubbed and slashed with a knife today by an assailant who entered the resort cabin she had rented recently at Crapo Lake, northeast of here.

State police investigating the case found the body of Mike Lux, owner of the cabin, in the north branch of Au Sable River.

Miss Crume, a school teacher, was brought here. Physicians said her condition was critical.

Sheriff Frank Bennett said no motive for the assault had been found. He said Miss Crume was still unconscious when she was brought here several hours after the assault, which apparently occurred about 8 a. m., today. Lux was drowned about noon, Bennett said.

The school teacher had come to the lake on a vacation trip.

cheering subjects, most of whom were unaware of the incident, rode on at the head of his troops. Crowds stood ten deep around the palace. His majesty took the salute of the guards in the palace courtyard and then disappeared beyond the portals.

Queen Mary, who had witnessed the salutes from a balcony, was unaware of the incident until she returned to the palace. Much distressed, she went immediately to the King and congratulated him on his escape.

Mahon was arraigned at Bow street by Detective Sergt. John Sands, who said:

"The accused was distraught and nervous."

"The King was not hurt in any way, was he?" Mahon asked. "I did not want to hurt him in any way."

Portrait of King Found.

Sands took from Mahon a black-edged envelope containing a post-card portrait of the King. He presented the gun in court with a copy of today's Daily Telegram on which Mahon had written in pencil:

"Capital, may I love you!"

Sir Rollo Campbell presided over the hearing while Bow street was under heavy guard as precaution against indignant crowd outbursts.

Mahon was the only one arrested. It was believed he acted entirely alone.

Huge crowds staged hostile demonstrations and jeered and booed Mahon when he was taken from Bow street to jail. Sands and a heavy detail of policemen had difficulty guarding him.

The Government tonight made elaborate plans to safeguard the lives of royalty and moved to restrict the traditional freedom of its sovereign.

Heavy police guards and plain-clothesmen will watch the King's every move to prevent recurrence of today's unsuccessful attempt on his life.

The King's speech before the incident was a protest against the horrors of war.

"Only a few of us parading this morning know the awful weight of war with all its horrors," he said. "Some of us knew it in the comradeships during the world struggle 20 years ago. With all my heart I hope and indeed pray that never again will our age and generation be called upon to face such stern, terrible days. Humanity cries out for peace."

Attired in Uniform.

The King was mounted when he made his speech. He was attired in the uniform of a colonel in chief of the Grenadiers. The Duke of York and the royal family were present. The six battalions drawn up to receive their colors from the King represented the Grenadiers, the Coldstream and the Scots Guards.

On the King's head was a black busby with the little red tuft of the Grenadiers. He wore a tunic with a black band of mourning for his father on his left arm. The uniform was completed with black, tight-fitting trousers down which ran a broad, red stripe. The King's sword swung against his caparisoned horse, which was decked in a saddle cloth bearing the royal arms.

The brown charger with three white feet was ridden by the late King George V when he reviewed the trooping of the colors ceremonies during the last three years of his life. Originally a police mount, the horse is renowned for its sedateness.

Thanks in Commons.

While police questioned Mahon, Home Secretary Sir John Simon expressed thankfulnes in the House of Commons "that the risk to which His Majesjty was exposed was promptly averted." A similar sentiment was expressed in the House of Lords by Viscount Halifax.

"I am sure I speak for all of your lordships when I say we are profoundly thankful that the risk to which His Majesjty was exposed was so happily averted," he said.

Scores of messages of congratulation, many from foreign lands, arrived at Buckingham Palace, where hundreds called to inquire for the King and sign the visitors' book.

There were amazing scenes downtown when newspaper extras appeared on the streets describing the attempt on the King's life. Newsboys sold their newspapers instantly. Crowds looked over the shoulders of buyers. They marveled that "such a thing could happen in England."

Newsboys carried placards inscribed:

Rumors of Injury.

"Attempt on King's life!"

Until the Scotland Yard investigation and the Bow street arraignment, numerous versions of the incident were current. For some time there were rumors that Mahon had been seriously injured by the crowd. He appeared at Scotland Yard minus his coat, his hair mussed and his polse gone. He wore a brown suit when he brandished his revolver at the King.

The Evening Standard reported Mahon pulled the trigger of his gun but that it failed to explode.

An Irish guardsmen who watched the procession said:

"My attention was attracted to the King, who was staring very hard to the left, when Mahon brandished his gun. The most marvelous thing was the King's courage. Although he was watching the man with the pistol all the time he never so much as flinched although he could not have known when a bullet was going to be fired. He neither pulled up nor increased the speed of his horse."

There was no doubt but that Mahon's life was in danger for a time.

"I don't think any of us quite knew what we were doing," a woman eye-witness said. "I found myself shouting. The crowd was getting ugly until the police appeared like magic."

James Offers To Expose Self To Two Snakes

Court, However, Turns Down Suggestion at Trial for Wife Killing.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, July 16.—Robert S. James, much-married barber, today offered at his murder trial to expose himself to two rattlesnakes in an effort to disprove Charles Hope's weird story of the part they played in the death of James' wife, Mary Busch James.

Superior Judge Charles W. Fricke promptly turned down the offer, extended by R. E. Parsons, James' attorney.

"This courtroom is not a three-ring circus," the judge said. "There's been enough sensationalism already."

Snake Escapes Box.

One of the snakes—named Lethal—escaped its box in the courtroom yesterday and created a mild panic among spectators before it was dragged from its hiding place under a bookcase.

Hope testified he bought the two snakes at James' request. Prosecutors charge James drowned his wife in a bathtub after exposing her foot to the snakes' fangs.

Parsons told the court that if James could put his foot into the snake box in court for the length of time Hope said Mrs. James' foot was exposed to the reptile, he would prove two points—first, that the snakes would not strike as quickly as Hope said, and, second, that if they did, the bite would not be serious.

Says Hope Was at Home.

Continuing his direct testimony today, James said that when he left for his barber shop the day his wife was found dead, Hope was at the James home with her. She was worrying about the fact that she was going to have a baby and declared she felt physically unable to undergo the strain, James said.

He said Hope told him, "It's O. K. You go on to work and don't worry—I'll take care of that."

"I loved her so much," said James. "The moment I saw her I knew she meant more to me than anything in the world. I loved her terrifically."

80 Poorhouse Inmates Saved From Flames

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., July 16.—A wind, which drove the flames the other way, today protected 80 occupants of the Allegany County almshouse and asylum, many of them aged and infirm, from one of the worst forest fires the county has known in years.

The fire, believed to have been set by boys, broke out at noon and roared up the side of Wells Mountain, directly above the county institutions and the City of Cumberland.

Officials said that unless the wind, which drove the blaze up the mountain, changed, the county institutions and hundreds of homes at the foot of the mountain were safe.

While foresters and CCC workers battled the flames, fire broke out in a two-story dwelling on the side of the mountain. It was driven by a high wind and destroyed the rear of the building before firemen could check it.

After CCC workers and volunteers had fought the forest fire for five hours under the direction of District Forester H. C. Buckingham, they said they believed they had checked the blaze. More than 50 acres had been burned over.

CCC workers from Garrett County camps were summoned to join others from Allegany County in the battle.

Spy Suspect Defends Actions As Hunt for Air Expert's Job

ly gray hair, covered and uncovered his face with shaky hands and seemed to have difficulty in recalling dates. He was smoothly shaven, which added to his pallor, and his legs and arms were gaunt from loss of weight.

"Been taking medicine all day," was his first remark as he sought to excuse his appearance. "I'm sick with neuritis. I've lost 43 pounds in the last few months. But I'm waiting for my cousin to come and get me out of here."

The story that Farnsworth told was that of a once-popular naval officer, ailing in body and spirit, trying to overcome the stigma of his court-martial and regain the former high esteem of his friends and family.

Turned to Aviation.

"Aviation was all I knew and naturally I turned to that as a means of regaining my feet, making my comeback," he said, puffing at his cigarette.

"The headlines are full of the Japanese, but, as a matter of fact, they were the last I wrote to," he continued. "I tried to get a job with the Chinese, Argentina, Brazil, Peru and the Russians."

"I started writing these letters about 1932," he recalled uncertainly. "I had to work with the Chinese through their consul in Chicago. The embassy didn't want to know anything about it. They didn't want to appear to be seeking military assistance. It seemed they were in a war—they're always in some sort of war.

"The Chinese said no. I also got a letter from Amtorg saying that they had hired all the engineers they needed, but that they would keep me in mind for something later. None of the other embassies replied."

"To whom did you address your letters?" he was asked.

Wrote to Embassies.

"I would write them directly to the embassy. With Amtorg I wrote to the executive director. The only time I wrote directly to anybody was to the Brazilian naval attache whom I knew—no, it was the Argentine attache whom I knew.

"I wrote to the Japanese Embassy. They seemed interested. And so I collected all my credentials, my last papers as an officer, three pictures that I had on my pilot's license and also some photographs that I got from the Navy press room.

"When I was stationed with Commander Yarnell (now rear admiral) we took pictures of everything we did. Those were the photographs I got from the press room. I took them to show the sort of work I had done.

"But the Japanese didn't seem satisfied. So I showed them a copy of 'Service and Information and Security.' I first got hold of the book in 1919, but I think it was a few years old even then. When I showed it, the man at the embassy said they had a copy of the book and also copies of the later revised editions.

"I took the book away with me. And here's the unbelievable part of the story. When I was dismissed from the service I packed up all my papers in a trunk and sent them home. Then I had to give up my home in this city. The agent let in two colored men to move things and they piled up all my papers, scrapbooks and things into a heap. Then some one burned them.

"I lost all my identification, everything. I could have been nobody. I know it's unbelievable, but the maid next door will tell you about it."

The photographs and papers he had given the member of the Japanese Embassy, Farnsworth said, were placed in an envelope and were to be sent to Toyko for a decision whether his offer was to be accepted.

"I wanted $50,000 cash down to get me across. Then a commander's commission and salary as long as I stayed. But there was to be a provision in the agreement that in case of war with the United States I was to be put on the shelf.

"I never heard from them. The other day when I got back to this city I called up the Embassy and asked them what had happened to my credentials and things. I couldn't get any satisfaction. Maybe because of this Thompson case (Harry L. Thompson was sentenced a few days ago to 15 years' imprisonment for selling naval secrets to the Japanese) they didn't want any Americans hanging around.

"Now," he continued, pointed a trembling finger at himself, "It'll be even worse."

Denies Asking Money.

Informed that Capt. Tamon Yamaguchi, Japanese naval attache, had told newspapermen that a man named Farnsworth telephoned him Saturday and asked for money in connection with espionage, Farnsworth denied making any such request.

"I may have spoken to Yamaguchi. I don't know who I talked to. But I'm sure I didn't ask for money."

Farnsworth refused to give the name of the Japanese with whom he had his dealings. Running his trembling fingers up the sides of his face and through his hair, his cheeks and lips quivering, he admitted having revealed the identity of the man to Justice agents.

"He was a bonafide officer, of that I'm sure," he said. "He was dressed in civilian clothes. But all the information I gave him wasn't worth anything. They could have gotten it all out of the public library."

Asked whether during the last year he had ever suspected he was being trailed by justice agents and naval intelligence officers, Farnsworth shook his head.

"They said I had been trailed for a year. I never saw one of them. I don't see how they could have been trailing me. For the last four months I've been sick in Cincinnati. I hardly left bed except to go to a movie. If they trailed me then, they must have been walking around the block."

Justice agents made their arrest between 9 and 10 Monday morning, and not later in the afternoon or early Tuesday morning as has been reported, Farnsworth said.

Tells of Arrest.

"I had just left the home of a friend to go to my wife's place. I was trying to straighten out the kids (Farnsworth has four children) and wanted fresh clothes. I hardly got in when two agents came in and said they wanted to question me for two hours.

"They said two hours, but afternoon passed and soon it was midnight. Then something happened outside and I was put into a bunk. Then I was taken out to, what do you call it? oh, yes, arraignment, and pleaded not guilty. The justice agents didn't stand me up against the wall. They gave me a seat to sit in."

Asked whether he had given justice agents names of any naval officers who had given him papers and pictures and other things, Farnsworth knitted his brow and replied hesitantly:

"I've a lot of friends in the department. I don't know what I said. I may have given a dozen names, maybe more. Maybe I didn't mention any. I don't remember."

Telegram Brought In.

Twice during the half-hour interview, the naval officer was interrupted. The first time was when a colored youth came in to make the unoccupied bed alongside of Farnsworth's bed and on which were heaped copies of the morning and afternoon papers, and several motion picture magazines. The second time was when a telegram was brought in.

Although the telegram was only three lines long, it took him more than a minute to read it. He stared at it for a time, before folding it up. It was with some effort and delay that he resumed his conversation where he had broken off.

On the matter of dates, the naval officer was extremely vague. He did his thinking aloud and changed his mind frequently. Asked when he began corresponding with the Japanese he muttered to himself.

"This is," he hesitated, "the summer of 1936. Last year was 1935 . . . Let me see. I think it was the fall of 1934."

Stretched on Bed.

Throughout most of the interview he lay stretched on his bed, raising himself on his elbow several times to adjust his pillow or to reach the drinking cup he used as an ash tray. He had placed the cup at the foot of the bed near this reporter. He smoked incessantly, burning his cigarettes down to the very tip and frequently exhaling the smoke from the corner of his mouth. Once when this reporter offered him a light, it was fully a minute before he could bring his trembling cigarette to meet the burning match.

A small table stood between the two beds and on the table was heaped three packages of cigarettes, several boxes of matches, a single $1 bill and some change. A pair of brown shoes was tossed carelessly under one bed and a pair of black, striped socks lay on the floors. Those were the only clothes in the room, Farnsworth being clad in a night-gown that barely reached to his knees. Frequently during the interview he would pull the night-gown over his knees, as women do their skirts.

Cousin Arrives.

The interview terminated with the visit of Ward Farnsworth, the accused man's cousin, who arrived in the city yesterday afternoon. After the visit Ward Farnsworth issued the following statement:

"My visit here is in repetition of many like meetings with former Lieut. Comdr. Farnsworth, and has wholly to do with the welfare of his physical and mental condition, which, from my observation, has now progressed to one of complete collapse.

"The action of the Federal Government in placing Farnsworth under arrest at last moves us into a position that should give us a better opportunity for the recognition of our plea of long standing.

"We have ourselves believed that permanent injuries in the line of former duties in the United States Navy have been the contributing cause of his seeming total incapacity to manage himself during the past ten years."

By the "we" and "us" in the statement, the cousin explained, he referred to the Farnsworth family in Chicago and Cincinnati. The accident to which he referred, he said, took place in 1926 when the plane crashed into Pensacola Bay from a height of 2,000 feet and "rendered John unconscious for some time."

Probable Defense Tack.

The cousin said this irresponsibility as a result of injuries received in the Navy Department would probably be the line of defense adopted by the family. The securing of counsel for the accused officer, awaits the arrival of another member of the family.

Farnsworth's trial—the first in history of an American naval officer accused of having sold out his country to a foreign power—is being looked to with considerable apprehension by State and Navy officials. State officials fear the revelation of the name of the member of the staff of the Japanese Embassy who had dealings with Farnsworth may force a diplomatic protest and lead to friction between the two countries.

Naval officers, on the other hand, are worried over what possible revisions in fleet tactics may be required because of trial disclosures and also the possibility that a number of innocent officers in the department may be brought into the case as persons who unwittingly assisted Farnsworth in collecting photographs, papers and other matter.

Youth Drowned In James River

Francis Wade, 20, of 500 Maryland avenue southwest, a former CCC worker, was drowned yesterday afternoon in the James River, near Lynchburg, as he tried to swim from the Amherst side of the stream to an isolated island, the Associated Press reported late last night.

After 2½ hours the body was recovered by Frank Kirby, diver of the Lynchburg Life Saving Squad, who hauled it 20 feet to the surface of the water.

Young Wade, according to the Associated Press, either became exhausted during the course of the 100-yard swim, or was seized with cromps and went down within 50 feet of the island.

A companion, swimming with him, became exhausted and almost lost his life in a futile rescue attempt.

Moley Praises Public Opinion Institute Polls

Scientific, Accurate and Honest, Asserts Editor; Warns Democrats.

High praise for the honesty, the science and the accuracy of the America Speaks polls of the Institute of Public Opinion, being published in The Washington Post, came yesterday from Raymond Moley, former Assistant Secretary of State in the Roosevelt Administration.

In an editorial in the current issue of the magazine Today, of which he now is editor, Moley, formerly frequently referred to as "Brain Truster No. 1," comments especially on the results of the poll published last Sunday, showing the Roosevelt popular vote reduced to 51.8 per cent and with a majority of the electoral vote in the Landon column.

He comments that if the Democrats "do not deceive themselves," the polls, being conducted by Dr. George Gallup, will influence the future strategy of the ruling party.

The editorial says:

"The first Landon-Roosevelt poll published by Dr. Gallup's Institute of Public Opinion provides the unexpected news that sentiment in this country is about evenly divided between the two candidates for President.

Praises Honesty.

"After personal study of Dr. Gallup's methods, I am convinced that his polls are scrupulously honest and as scientific as present knowledge can make them. Their accuracy has been proved on a number of occasions in the past. They are better indications of public opinion than the Literary Digest poll, for reasons too technical and numerous to set forth here.

"The Gallup poll of last Sunday shows that the popularity of President Roosevelt has dropped from 55.8 to 51.8 in one month; that 13 States are safe for Landon and that eight more are for Landon by a narrow margin; that 24 States are safe for Roosevelt and three more States are for Roosevelt by a narrow margin. On this basis, Landon would receive 272 electoral votes as against Roosevelt's 259. It takes 266 to elect.

"But in any straw vote the important thing to note is the trend of public opinion. The Gallup poll shows a sharp Nation-wide swing away from Roosevelt. In only seven States has there been a gain in his poularity.

Cites Middle West.

"In the Middle West, the real battleground of this campaign, there has been a general subsidence in the pro-Roosevelt sentiment. Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and South Dakota, which a month ago were doubtful States, are now decisively for Landon. Minnesota, Illinois and Indiana are for Landon by a narrow margin. This poll did not register Lemke votes. But it seems probable at this time that Lemke will get enough votes in the doubtful States of Minnesota, Michigan and Ohio to put them definitely into the Landon group in next month's poll.

"Polls are not elections. Nevertheless they not only reflect a changing situation, but themselves influence changes in sentiment.

"Whether this startling indication of Landon's strength will influence the future strategy of the Democrats remains to be seen. If they do not deceive themselves, it will. It seemed to thoughtful people that the warlike note struck in Philadelphia, which could only be interpreted as the assurance of a continuation of leftist reform, was unsound politically because the country was temporarily tired of reform. The Gallup poll provides impartial evidence to support the wisdom of that judgment."

Harbord to Arrive Today.

The other two wartime commanders of the division are Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, who will arrive for the reunion today, and Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy, now ill in Walter Reed Hospital.

The veterans gathered at the Willard last night for an informal reunion program, which included a dance, a floor show, and a concert by the Marine Band. Music for the dance was furnished by the Navy Band Orchestra.

Many of the veterans have brought their wives with them, others have brought sons and daughters now as old as they themselves were when they enlisted.

The floor show last night was arranged by Dr. Charles W. Tegge, head of the local chapter, and a committee headed by Police Lieut. Thomas Mason.

The program for today includes a visit to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington this morning. Frank J. Bart, Medal of Honor man and former private in Company C of the Ninth Infantry, has been chosen to lay a wreath on the tomb. In the evening there will be a dance at the Willard with music by the Marine Band orchestra.

To Be Interviewed.

At 4 p. m. today 12 men of the division, chosen at random, will be interviewed over station WRC by Ted Kimball, N. B. C. announcer.

Tomorrow, the last day of the reunion, will be featured by the dedication of Second Division Memorial on the Ellipse. The dedication address, to be made by Maj. Gen. Harbord, will be broadcast.

The dedication exercises will include the massing of regimental colors and a 21-gun salute to the 4,200 dead of the division.

The annual business meeting will be held at 9:30 a. m. The reunion concludes tomorrow night with the annual dinner at the Willard.

Target of Assassins.

Tuxtla Gutierrez, Chiapas, Mexico, July 16 (AP).—A gang of gunmen attempted to assassinate Efrain Gutierrez, candidate for governor of the State of Chiapas, at dawn today. They attacked his home and shot through the windows, but none of the bullets struck Gutierrez.

Politics and People

Newspapers Leaning Over Backwards to Be Fair in Reporting of Campaign.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Mr. Waltman's column today consists of an extract from an open forum address on the "Responsibilities of the Press in a Democracy," which he delivered yesterday before the Institute of Public Affairs of the University of Virginia.

I BELIEVE that the corps of Washington newspaper correspondents, who are the real moulders of public opinion in regard to National politics and affairs, has sincerely tried to do its job well and against great difficulties. The stock market crash of 1929 forced to the front many technical problems and questions strange to these writers. They have striven courageously and intelligently, may I assert, to master the intricacies of these problems in order not only that they could understand them, but so that they could present and discuss them in a manner easily understood by the readers of their newspapers who lacked specialized knowledge or training.

WALTMAN.

As an illustration: The time was not long ago when the activities of so technical an agency as the Governors of the Federal Reserve System were of interest only to bankers, financiers and those who pursued such subjects from an academic viewpoint. The news of that agency prior to the depression seldom was found in any place but on the financial pages of the daily newspaper or in periodicals devoted solely to finance.

But experience had demonstrated that the decisions and policies of the Federal Reserve authorities frequently affected the lives of the lowliest among us. The press of this country undertook to popularize the significance of such terms as "excess reserves," "open market operations" and "credit inflation"—terms which previously seldom were heard outside of the counting room—and so today the important decisions—or lack of decisions—of the Federal Reserve authorities have become front-page news.

This was not done for the benefit of the so-called money power or the Wall Street bankers, for they had other access to the facts of what was transpiring. It was done to enlighten the man in the street, to enable him to have a more intelligent understanding of the forces at work in this Nation which affect his livelihood and his happiness—and that, may I say, is an illustration in which the American press has lived up to its responsibilities in a democracy.

And that is but one of many illustrations which could be cited. So it was with the momentous banking legislation which became necessary during recent years; with the innovations undertaken in our monetary system; with the Supreme Court decisions invalidating many of the New Deal acts and raising questions of the greatest and most vital importance to the functioning of our democracy. Not only did the American press give to its readers the information of what had been done—frequently presenting the complete text of important documents for the benefit of those desiring all details—but it presented interpretations by competent writers of the significance of such actions and the reasons why some opposed them and others advocated them.

In the field of labor relations the American press in the last four years has bounded forward, presenting in many instances in the most detailed accounts the issues between employer and employe. Statements and speeches of labor leaders have been presented at great length in newspapers owned and edited by men who thoroughly disagreed with most of the contents of such statements and speeches. Such is a tolerance that is necessary to and compatible with a democracy.

Most of our newspapers, I believe, have entered into the present Presidential campaign with a determination to be fair and objective in the presentation of the news and to maintain a tolerance of opinion, irrespective of the partisan leaning of the paper's editorial columns. This was demonstrated during the two national conventions. Many Republican newspapers were far more critical of what transpired at Cleveland than was the Democratic press and many Democratic newspapers were harsher in their denunciation of the inane meeting held at Philadelphia than were those newspapers with Republican leanings.

Indeed, if most of our newspapers were to be criticized at all over their handling of the convention news it would have to be on the score that they leaned over backward in seeking to be tolerant and kindly toward the party to which they were editorially opposed. I think it is a safe statement that never before have so many newspapers, irrespective of political preference, carried the full text of the major speeches delivered at the two political conventions as this year—and may I add that the Associated Press carried and many newspapers printed in full the text of the platform adopted by the convention of the Socialist Party.

I have reason to believe that this desire to present to the people of this country the arguments of the various candidates in this campaign and whatever other information relates to the issues will continue in the major part of the American press until election day. I have been told by colleagues on newspapers ardently supporting the Presidential candidacy of Gov. Alf M. Landon that they proposed to lean over backward in presenting every important fact and argument projected by President Roosevelt and the Democrats. Many newspapers favoring the re-election of President Roosevelt propose to follow a similar policy in regard to the Republican candidate. Their contention is that the welfare of the country will best be served by keeping the discussion alive and virile.

I believe the greatest service rendered the democratic idea and this Nation in recent years was the part which the American press played, almost single-handedly, in the early part of the New Deal in keeping alive the spirit of discussion. Normally the opposition party to that in power forces debate and discussion of whatever program is projected. But so badly defeated had the Republicans been in 1932 and again in 1934; so demoralized and dispirited had they become, that they abandoned the responsibility which rests on the minority party under our form of government to scrutinize and to challenge whatever is proposed by the majority. As far as they were concerned, the battle went on every issue in those early days to the New Deal by default.

It was the press of this country—both Democratic and Republican—which called a halt on the inexcusable haste and indifference with which measures of far-reaching effect were being adopted by our Congress on recommendation of the Executive. Slowly but surely the press of this country forced both the Administration and the Congress to give heed to the deliberative process so necessary in a democracy. It is possible that in those days, we had come close to the brink of a dictatorship in this land. If that is true, then the credit for turning back such forces belongs almost exclusively to the American press—and that alone should be sufficient to wash away many of its sins and transgressions against the democratic idea.

In conclusion may I repeat with concurrence the words of Viscount Bryce, England's brilliant author and diplomat: "The clash and conflict of argument bring out the strength and weakness of every case, and that which is sound tends to prevail. Let the cynics say what they will, man is not an irrational animal. Truth usually wins in the long run, though the obsessions of self-interest or prejudice or ignorance may long delay its victory."

Costlier Food Feared in Wake Of Ruined Crop

Supplies Likely to Be One Per Cent Less Than in Last Drought.

By Sidney Olson.

One of the major calamities of the drought which yesterday scorched through its fourteenth day of crop-killing temperatures will be Mrs. America's grocery bill this fall and winter, it appeared yesterday from a study of the situation.

The Agriculture Department published a national food survey that showed prospetcive food supplies of the country would be 1 per cent less than those for 1934-35, the year of the worst drought in the country's history.

Yesterday's weather forecasts for the drought area held no relief in sight for the corn belt, where a disaster greater than that of 1934 is looming larger every day without rain.

The country's greatest cash crop continued to wither in the brutal heat. The black drought spots on the Agriculture Department maps of the corn regions were inked a little larger over wider areas. The corn crop is nearing its final deadline. Just before July 1 Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace said the national bread basket could survive in the main if rain came within three weeks.

No showers of consequence have alleviated the terrific heat thus far, and the corn crop already has been wiped out in many counties. The remainder, sucking moisture from subsurface water, has weathered the drought very well, and can be saved with rains in the next few days, crop experts say.

The 14 past days constitute the hottest, driest fortnight in the history of the corn belt, weather records showed.

Food Problem Debated.

The food problem was the center of conflicting estimates. Figures of the department showing that the food supply should be one per cent less than in 1934-35, were coupled with a claim that there would be no actual food scarcity.

Higher prices were outlined for butter, cheese, eggs and the better grades of cattle, while lower prices were said to be prospective for potatoes, hogs, the lower grades of cattle, feeder lambs, poultry and wool.

The statement of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics said:

"All food supplies for domestic consumption and export are expected to be about three per cent less than those of 1935-36 and one per cent less than the food supply of 1934-35."

Developments of Day.

Drought developments during the day included:

Forty-three counties in North Carolina, Georgia and Kentucky were added to the drought black list of emergency counties, making a grand total of 452 in 14 States. The 28 counties in North Carolina brought that State into the drought list for the first time.

The Works Progress Administration announced that on July 13 it had given employment to 22,074 destitute farmers in five drought States—Minnesota, the Dakotas, Montana and Wyoming—primary centers of drought destruction.

The Resettlement Administration announced 41 land-use adjustment projects in operation in Montana, Nebraska, the Dakotas and Wyoming, involving the purchase of about 4,000,000 acres of land for approximately $13,749,000.

U. S. Navy Gains One Warship In 6 Months; Total Now Is 351

By the Associated Press.

The United States Navy—in its evolution toward a modern, treaty-limit sea fighting force by 1942—has made a net gain of one warship and 12,710 tons during the last six months.

An official summary of ships and tonnage in commission made public last night shows that—with the addition of the new heavy cruiser Quincy—the Navy now consists of 351 warships of 1,478,954 tons.

A similar summary on January 1 showed 350 vessels of 1,466,244 tons in active service.

Warships out of commission, but still considered fit for service in an emergency total 184 of 539,510 tons, a decrease of 31 ships from the 215 of 577,380 tons listed six months ago.

The 31 ships have been scrapped or listed for scrapping as overage and obsolete.

79 Under Construction.

Ships now under construction total 79 of 265,515 tons, as against 84 of 281,870 tons which were under construction on January 1.

The Navy of today consists of the following 351 vessels in commission:

Battleships—15 of 464,300 tons. (The Navy has plans to begin construction of two new battleships to replace those overage whenever the British lay keels for the two new ships they have announced they will build.

Cruisers—16 heavy and 10 light, totaling 222,300 tons.

Aircraft carriers—4 of 92,000 tons.

Destroyers—106 of 124,555 tons.

Submarines—53 of 53,830 tons.

Mine layers and sweepers—26 of 26,480 tons.

Patrol Vessels.

Patrol vessels—36 or 13,340 tons, including nine eagle boats, 14 submarine chasers, 3 gunboats, 8 river gunboats and two converted yachts.

Auxiliaries—72 of 429,755 tons, including 6 destroyer tenders, 5 submarine tenders, 1 seaplane tender, 9 aircraft tenders, 2 repair ships, 1 floating dry dock, 2 store ships, 8 oilers, 1 ammunition ship, 2 cargo ships, 2 transports, 1 hospital ship, 17 ocean-going tugs, 5 submarine rescue vessels and 10 miscellaneous auxiliaries.

In addition the Navy has 13 unclassified ships of 52,394 tons.

The Navy has 76 destroyers of 84,660 tons out of commission, but "fit for service," making a total—with the ships in commission—of 192 of 209,215 tons.

An additional 51 of 80,350 tons are now under construction.

Under the 1930 naval treaty the United States was limited to 150,000 tons of destroyers. Great Britain's action on Wednesday in invoking the escalator clause of that treaty to keep 40,000 tons of destroyers after December 31, 1936, automaticaly permits the United States to retain the same destroyer tonnage.

Policemen, Bull Chase Each Other

Newton, Mass., July (AP).—Two policemen and a young bull with horns 4 inches long took turns chasing each other through this fashionable suburb today.

Panting pedestrians and screaming school children joined in the alternate advances and retreats through hedges, lawns and flower gardens.

Dragging a looped rope, the policemen overtook the animal as he paused to breakfast on a green lawn. Then the bull charged and the patrolmen fled to their patrol car.

They thought they had the animal cornered later, at a railroad station, but it dashed in one door of the station and out another, while commuters fled in panic.

At last, with the aid of a third man, the policemen threw the bull on the station platform. Then he was led back to the stockyard from which he had escaped.

Gypsy Queen Is Dead

cious lawn of Miss Kroues Ficklin, between 25 and 50 others were congregated, gazing toward Queen Ruby's room in the hospital.

Automobiles whizzed by and the sun grew hotter, with the wind tickling the trees and playing the music Gypsies love to tune their banjoes to.

Then, just as police had received permission from hospital authorities to go as far as they liked in clearing the queen's death chamber, the end came.

The wind seemed to die down, and play no more music through the leafy strings.

King John stood now, slightly stooped, his bronze face wrinkled with sad lines that criss-crossed like the aimless trails Gypsies sometimes follow in sorrow.

"Queen Ruby is dead," he said.

For a moment there was silence in the room. Then there were sobs. Those who waited on the lawn in the darkness heard the word. In weeping groups they filed back to their camp, down the highway, near the Penn Daw Hotel, where their motorized caravan had been parked since the queen had been stricken a week ago.

Presently in the hospital room there was a yellow gleam of candles. The beams fenced back and forth across the queen's still form.

The queen will be accorded a regal funeral. Her body will be embalmed and borne by her sorrowing followers and her widower to Petersburg, Va., for burial.

She was the mother of nine children, and most of them have traveled in the Mitchell tribe.

King John last night wanted desperately to find her son, George.

"He is far away, out on the big prairies in the West," he said. "He is either in Minnesota or North Dakota, and he does not know. I must find him."

Prince George is married to a fortune teller. They travel with a carnival.

The Gypsy camp was bleak with sorrow. Women wailed, men stood in little groups, speaking in low voices and trying to console King John.

No mandolins tinkled. No voices sang songs of the open road and life that seems to go on forever.

Queen Ruby was dead.

Half U. S. Remains in Most Prolonged Wave on Record.

Despite scattered showers throughout the Middle West, and the assurance of meteorologists in the Chicago area that relief in a general sense is on the way, more than half the Nation yesterday remained in the throes of what is perhaps the most prolonged heat wave on record—a heat wave which has claimed the Associated Press estimated last night, no less than 4,200 lives.

Washington was comparatively cool, with a maximum temperature of 88 degrees at 3 p. m., and a minimum of 70 at 6 a. m. When the mercury reached its height here yesterday the humidity was relatively low, reading 39.

Gentle breezes from a generally northeast and eastern direction fanned the city as the weather man predicted probable showers for today. No heat prostrations were reported.

For at least two more days, asserted J. R. Lloyd, of the Chicago weather office, no definite alleviation can be expected from the high temperatures.

The highest noon temperature of the season was recorded in Pierre, S. Dak., when 109 degrees was reached.

Other high marks about this hour, the Associated Press recorded, included Aberdeen, S. Dak., 108; Mitchell, S. Dak., 105; Bismarck, N. Dak. 100; Kearney, Nebr., 102; Beatrice, Nebr., 103; Lincoln, Nebr., 105; Falls City, Nebr., 105, and Norfolk, Nebr., 107.

For parts of Illinois, already hard hit, warmer weather again was in store, the Associated Press said.

Western Michigan and most of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys also are due for prolonged heat, as well as the greater poritons of the plains States.

A return of 90-to-100 degree readings was predicted for Chicago, where more temperate conditions have prevailed. The first half of July was the driest on record in the Chicago vicinity.

Cool breezes and occasional showers helped Michigan reduce its appalling death rate, but yesterday its total reached 606, second only to Minnesota, with 753.

Officials Knew Mahon Planned Attack on King

Detectives Sent to Guard His Home, but Arrived After He Left.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, July 16.—Police knew in advance that Andrew Mahon intended to make trouble while King Edward VIII led 6,000 of his guardsmen on parade today.

Mahon, the Irishman who brandished a revolver at His Majesty, lived in the basement of a large house in Westbourne terrace, Paddington, a district of London.

Normally he left his home at 8:45 a. m. daily, but today he left at 6:45. At 8 a. m. two detectives arrived and watched the house from the end of the street until 9 a. m. It was 12:21 p. m. when Mahon attempted to shoot the King. The presence of the detectives was evidence that the police had an inkling of impending trouble. They locked Mahon's house this afternoon.

Sued Agitator in April.

Last April, Mahon, giving his name as McMahon, sued Mrs. Violet Vanderelst, wealthy agitator against capital punishment, at Marylebone. He appeared in the county court and asked $210 for the hire of automobiles she used in her last general election campaign at Putney.

The case was dismissed and Mahon asked permission to appeal. The judge refused the petition and Mahon exclaimed:

"That is not justice."

He was ordered to return to the witness stand and apologize to the judge or go to jail for contempt of court. He apologized.

At Bow Street Court today Mahon said:

"It is all the fault of Sir John Simon (secretary of state for home affairs). I wrote to him last night and telephoned to him this morning.

"Only as a Protest."

"Was the King hurt? I did it only as a protest."

The court assigned Alfred Kerstein to act as Mahon's lawyer. He asked Detective Sergeant John Sands:

"You say the revolver was loaded in four chambers I take it the other chamber was not discharged."

Sands, who arraigned Mahon, replied:

"There is no evidence that the revolver had been fired for a considerable time."

Mahon was nervous. He moved his hands about his face and swayed unsteadily on his feet. Kerstein denied emphatically that Mahon attempted to assassinate the King or had any desire to kill His Majesty.

Declared a "Crank."

Britons sighed with relief when they learned that the court evidence tended to indicate that Mahon was nothing more than a "crank" with a grievance such as sometimes causes persons to heave bricks through the windows of 10 Downing street, official residence of the Prime Minister, or call at Buckingham Palace, claiming that they are the rightful King of England.

The affair, however, brought home to the public, probably for the first time, the risks that British royalty can and do run.

While excitement over the affair probably will die down until Mahon's next hearing, it was pointed out that the public should accept that the Irishman was suffering from a grievance, real or imaginary.

Kerstein has asked for a mental examination of Mahon. He described his client's condition as "jittery."

Ex-Newspaper Editor.

Mahon recently was editor of a newspaper called the Human Gazette. He described himself in court as a journalist. He will be examined as to his mental condition before appearing for another hearing in eight days.

Immediately after the Bow Street Court hearing the King called for a report on the whole incident from his personal police officer, Chief Inspector Storrier.

Full details were given to His Majesty.

The King, entirely unperturbed, expressed the wish that court proceedings minimize his own association with the incident as much as possible.

A record of the Bow Street proceedings was placed in the hands of the King.

Teacher Slashed; Man's Body Found

Grayling, Mich., July 16 (AP).—Miss Rachel Crume, 21, of Findlay, Ohio, was clubbed and slashed with a knife today by an assailant who entered the resort cabin she had rented recently at Crapo Lake, northeast of here.

State police investigating the case found the body of Mike Lux, owner of the cabin, in the north branch of Au Sable River.

Miss Crume, a school teacher, was brought here. Physicians said her condition was critical.

Sheriff Frank Bennett said no motive for the assault had been found. He said Miss Crume was still unconscious when she was brought here several hours after the assault, which apparently occurred about 8 a. m., today. Lux was drowned about noon, Bennett said.

The school teacher had come to the lake on a vacation trip.

cheering subjects, most of whom were unaware of the incident, rode on at the head of his troops. Crowds stood ten deep around the palace. His majesty took the salute of the guards in the palace courtyard and then disappeared beyond the portals.

Queen Mary, who had witnessed the salutes from a balcony, was unaware of the incident until she returned to the palace. Much distressed, she went immediately to the King and congratulated him on his escape.

Mahon was arraigned at Bow street by Detective Sergt. John Sands, who said:

"The accused was distraught and nervous."

"The King was not hurt in any way, was he?" Mahon asked. "I did not want to hurt him in any way."

Portrait of King Found.

Sands took from Mahon a black-edged envelope containing a post-card portrait of the King. He presented the gun in court with a copy of today's Daily Telegram on which Mahon had written in pencil:

"Capital, may I love you!"

Sir Rollo Campbell presided over the hearing while Bow street was under heavy guard as precaution against indignant crowd outbursts.

Mahon was the only one arrested. It was believed he acted entirely alone.

Huge crowds staged hostile demonstrations and jeered and booed Mahon when he was taken from Bow street to jail. Sands and a heavy detail of policemen had difficulty guarding him.

The Government tonight made elaborate plans to safeguard the lives of royalty and moved to restrict the traditional freedom of its sovereign.

Heavy police guards and plain-clothesmen will watch the King's every move to prevent recurrence of today's unsuccessful attempt on his life.

The King's speech before the incident was a protest against the horrors of war.

"Only a few of us parading this morning know the awful weight of war with all its horrors," he said. "Some of us knew it in the comradeships during the world struggle 20 years ago. With all my heart I hope and indeed pray that never again will our age and generation be called upon to face such stern, terrible days. Humanity cries out for peace."

Attired in Uniform.

The King was mounted when he made his speech. He was attired in the uniform of a colonel in chief of the Grenadiers. The Duke of York and the royal family were present. The six battalions drawn up to receive their colors from the King represented the Grenadiers, the Coldstream and the Scots Guards.

On the King's head was a black busby with the little red tuft of the Grenadiers. He wore a tunic with a black band of mourning for his father on his left arm. The uniform was completed with black, tight-fitting trousers down which ran a broad, red stripe. The King's sword swung against his caparisoned horse, which was decked in a saddle cloth bearing the royal arms.

The brown charger with three white feet was ridden by the late King George V when he reviewed the trooping of the colors ceremonies during the last three years of his life. Originally a police mount, the horse is renowned for its sedateness.

Thanks in Commons.

While police questioned Mahon, Home Secretary Sir John Simon expressed thankfulness in the House of Commons "that the risk to which His Majesty was exposed was promptly averted." A similar sentiment was expressed in the House of Lords by Viscount Halifax.

"I am sure I speak for all of your lordships when I say we are profoundly thankful that the risk to which His Majesty was exposed was so happily averted," he said.

Scores of messages of congratulation, many from foreign lands, arrived at Buckingham Palace, where hundreds called to inquire for the King and sign the visitors' book.

There were amazing scenes downtown when newspaper extras appeared on the streets describing the attempt on the King's life. Newsboys sold their newspapers instantly. Crowds looked over the shoulders of buyers. They marveled that "such a thing could happen in England."

Newsboys carried placards inscribed:

Rumors of Injury.

"Attempt on King's life!"

Until the Scotland Yard investigation and the Bow street arraignment, numerous versions of the incident were current. For some time there were rumors that Mahon had been seriously injured by the crowd. He appeared at Scotland Yard minus his coat, his hair mussed and his poise gone. He wore a brown suit when he brandished his revolver at the King.

The Evening Standard reported Mahon pulled the trigger of his gun but that it failed to explode.

An Irish guardsmen who watched the procession said:

"My attention was attracted to the King, who was staring very hard to the left, when Mahon brandished his gun. The most marvelous thing was the King's courage. Although he was watching the man with the pistol all the time he never so much as flinched although he could not have known when a bullet was going to be fired. He neither pulled up nor increased the speed of his horse."

There was no doubt but that Mahon's life was in danger for a time.

"I don't think any of us quite knew what we were doing," a woman eye-witness said. "I found myself shouting. The crowd was getting ugly until the police appeared like magic."

James Offers To Expose Self To Two Snakes

Court, However, Turns Down Suggestion at Trial for Wife Killing.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, July 16.—Robert S. James, much-married barber, today offered at his murder trial to expose himself to two rattlesnakes in an effort to disprove Charles Hope's weird story of the part they played in the death of James' wife, Mary Busch James.

Superior Judge Charles W. Fricke promptly turned down the offer, extended by R. E. Parsons, James' attorney.

"This courtroom is not a three-ring circus," the judge said. "There's been enough sensationalism already."

Snake Escapes Box.

One of the snakes—named Lethal—escaped its box in the courtroom yesterday and created a mild panic among spectators before it was dragged from its hiding place under a bookcase.

Hope testified he bought the two snakes at James' request. Prosecutors charge James drowned his wife in a bathtub after exposing her foot to the snakes' fangs.

Parsons told the court that if James could put his foot into the snake box in court for the length of time Hope said Mrs. James' foot was exposed to the reptile, he would prove two points—first, that the snakes would not strike as quickly as Hope said, and, second, that if they did, the bite would not be serious.

Says Hope Was at Home.

Continuing his direct testimony today, James said that when he left for his barber shop the day his wife was found dead, Hope was at the James home with her. She was worrying about the fact that she was going to have a baby and declared she felt physically unable to undergo the strain, James said.

He said Hope told him, "It's O. K. You go on to work and don't worry—I'll take care of that."

"I loved her so much," said James. "The moment I saw her I knew she meant more to me than anything in the world. I loved her terrifically."

80 Poorhouse Inmates Saved From Flames

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., July 16.—A wind, which drove the flames the other way, today protected 80 occupants of the Allegany County almshouse and asylum, many of them aged and infirm, from one of the worst forest fires the county has known in years.

The fire, believed to have been set by boys, broke out at noon and roared up the side of Wells Mountain, directly above the county institutions and the City of Cumberland.

Officials said that unless the wind, which drove the blaze up the mountain, changed, the county institutions and hundreds of homes at the foot of the mountain were safe.

While foresters and CCC workers battled the flames, fire broke out in a two-story dwelling on the side of the mountain. It was driven by a high wind and destroyed the rear of the building before firemen could check it.

After CCC workers and volunteers had fought the forest fire for five hours under the direction of District Forester H. C. Buckingham, they said they believed they had checked the blaze. More than 50 acres had been burned over.

CCC workers from Garrett County camps were summoned to join others from Allegany County in the battle.

Spy Suspect Defends Actions As Hunt for Air Expert's Job

ly gray hair, covered and uncovered his face with shaky hands and seemed to have difficulty in recalling dates. He was smoothly shaven, which added to his pallor, and his legs and arms were gaunt from loss of weight.

"Been taking medicine all day," was his first remark as he sought to excuse his appearance. "I'm sick with neuritis. I've lost 43 pounds in the last few months. But I'm waiting for my cousin to come and get me out of here."

The story that Farnsworth told was that of a once-popular naval officer, ailing in body and spirit, trying to overcome the stigma of his court-martial and regain the former high esteem of his friends and family.

Turned to Aviation.

"Aviation was all I knew and naturally I turned to that as a means of regaining my feet, making my comeback," he said, puffing at his cigarette.

"The headlines are full of the Japanese, but, as a matter of fact, they were the last I wrote to," he continued. "I tried to get a job with the Chinese, Argentina, Brazil, Peru and the Russians."

"I started writing these letters about 1932," he recalled uncertainly. "I had to work with the Chinese through their consul in Chicago. The embassy didn't want to know anything about it. They didn't want to appear to be seeking military assistance. It seemed they were in a war—they're always in some sort of war.

"The Chinese said no. I also got a letter from Amtorg saying that they had hired all the engineers they needed, but that they would keep me in mind for something later. None of the other embassies replied."

"To whom did you address your letters?" he was asked.

Wrote to Embassies.

"I would write them directly to the embassy. With Amtorg I wrote to the executive director. The only time I wrote directly to anybody was to the Brazilian naval attache whom I knew—no, it was the Argentine attache whom I knew.

"I wrote to the Japanese Embassy. They seemed interested. And so I collected all my credentials, my last papers as an officer, three pictures that I had on my pilot's license and also some photographs that I got from the Navy press room.

"When I was stationed with Commander Yarnell (now rear admiral) we took pictures of everything we did. Those were the photographs I got from the press room. I took them to show the sort of work I had done.

"But the Japanese didn't seem satisfied. So I showed them a copy of 'Service and Information and Security.' I first got hold of the book in 1919, but I think it was a few years old even then. When I showed it, the man at the embassy said they had a copy of the book and also copies of the later revised editions.

"I took the book away with me. And here's the unbelievable part of the story. When I was dismissed from the service I packed up all my papers in a trunk and sent them home. Then I had to give up my home in this city. The agent let in two colored men to move things and they piled up all my papers, scrapbooks and things into a heap. Then some one burned them.

"I lost all my identification, everything. I could have been nobody. I know it's unbelievable, but the maid next door will tell you about it."

The photographs and papers he had given the member of the Japanese Embassy. Farnsworth said, were placed in an envelope and were to be sent to Toyko for a decision whether his offer was to be accepted.

"I wanted $50,000 cash down to get me across. Then a commander's commission and salary as long as I stayed. But there was to be a provision in the agreement that in case of war with the United States I was to be put on the shelf.

"I never heard from them. The other day when I got back to this city I called up the Embassy and asked them what had happened to my credentials and things. I couldn't get any satisfaction. Maybe because of this Thompson case (Harry L. Thompson was sentenced a few days ago to 15 years' imprisonment for selling naval secrets to the Japanese) they didn't want any Americans hanging around.

"Now," he continued, pointed a trembling finger at himself, "it'll be even worse."

Denies Asking Money.

Informed that Capt. Tamon Yamaguchi, Japanese naval attache, had told newspapermen that a man named Farnsworth telephoned him Saturday and asked for money in connection with espionage, Farnsworth denied making any such request.

"I may have spoken to Yamaguchi. I don't know who I talked to. But I'm sure I didn't ask for money."

Farnsworth refused to give the name of the Japanese with whom he had his dealings. Running his trembling fingers up the sides of his face and through his hair, his cheeks and lips quivering, he admitted having revealed the identity of the man to Justice agents.

"He was a bonafide officer, of that I'm sure," he said. "He was dressed in civilian clothes. But all the information I gave him wasn't worth anything. They could have gotten it all out of the public library."

Asked whether during the last year he had ever suspected he was being trailed by justice agents and naval intelligence officers, Farnsworth shook his head.

"They said I had been trailed for a year. I never saw one of them. I don't see how they could have been trailing me. For the last four months I've been sick in Cincinnati. I hardly left bed except to go to a movie. If they trailed me then, they must have been walking around the block."

Justice agents made their arrest between 9 and 10 Monday morning, and not later in the afternoon or early Tuesday morning as has been reported, Farnsworth said.

Tells of Arrest.

"I had just left the home of a friend to go to my wife's place. I was trying to straighten out the kids (Farnsworth has four children) and wanted fresh clothes. I hardly got in when two agents came in and said they wanted to question me for two hours.

"They said two hours, but afternoon passed and soon it was midnight. Then something happened outside and I was put into a bunk. Then I was taken out to, what do you call it? oh, yes, arraignment, and pleaded not guilty. The justice agents didn't stand me up against the wall. They gave me a seat to sit in."

Asked whether he had given justice agents names of any naval officers who had given him papers and pictures and other things, Farnsworth knitted his brow and replied hesitantly:

"I've a lot of friends in the department. I don't know what I said. I may have given a dozen names, maybe more. Maybe I didn't mention any. I don't remember."

Telegram Brought In.

Twice during the half-hour interview, the naval officer was interrupted. The first time was when a colored youth came in to make the unoccupied bed alongside of Farnsworth's bed and on which were heaped copies of the morning and afternoon papers, and several motion picture magazines. The second time was when a telegram was brought in.

Although the telegram was only three lines long, it took him more than a minute to read it. He stared at it for a time, before folding it up. It was with some effort and delay that he resumed his conversation where he had broken off.

On the matter of dates, the naval officer was extremely vague. He did his thinking aloud and changed his mind frequently. Asked when he began corresponding with the Japanese he muttered to himself.

"This is," he hesitated, "the summer of 1936. Last year was 1935 . . . Let me see. I think it was the fall of 1934."

Stretched on Bed.

Throughout most of the interview he lay stretched on his bed, raising himself on his elbow several times to adjust his pillow or to reach the drinking cup he used as an ash tray. He had placed the cup at the foot of the bed near this reporter. He smoked incessantly, burning his cigarettes down to the very tip and frequently exhaling the smoke from the corner of his mouth. Once when this reporter offered him a light, it was fully a minute before he could bring his trembling cigarette to meet the burning match.

A small table stood between the two beds and on the table was heaped three packages of cigarettes, several boxes of matches, a single $1 bill and some change. A pair of brown shoes was tossed carelessly under one bed and a pair of black, striped socks lay on the floors. Those were the only clothes in the room, Farnsworth being clad in a night-gown that barely reached to his knees. Frequently during the interview he would pull the night-gown over his knees, as women do their skirts.

Cousin Arrives.

The interview terminated with the visit of Ward Farnsworth, the accused man's cousin, who arrived in the city yesterday afternoon. After the visit Ward Farnsworth issued the following statement:

"My visit here is in repetition of many like meetings with former Lieut. Comdr. Farnsworth, and has wholly to do with the welfare of his physical and mental condition, which, from my observation, has now progressed to one of complete collapse.

"The action of the Federal Government in placing Farnsworth under arrest at last moves us into a position that should give us a better opportunity for the recognition of our plea of long standing.

"We have ourselves believed that permanent injuries in the line of former duties in the United States Navy have been the contributing cause of his seeming total incapacity to manage himself during the past ten years."

By the "we" and "us" in the statement, the cousin explained, he referred to the Farnsworth family in Chicago and Cincinnati. The accident to which he referred, he said, took place in 1928 when the plane crashed into Pensacola Bay from a height of 2,000 feet and "rendered John unconscious for some time."

Probable Defense Tack.

The cousin said this irresponsibility as a result of injuries received in the Navy Department would probably be the line of defense adopted by the family. The securing of counsel for the accused officer, awaits the arrival of another member of the family.

Farnsworth's trial—the first in history of an American naval officer accused of having sold out his country to a foreign power—is being looked to with considerable apprehension by State and Navy officials. State officials fear the revelation of the name of the member of the staff of the Japanese Embassy who had dealings with Farnsworth may force a diplomatic protest and lead to friction between the two countries.

Naval officers, on the other hand, are worried over what possible revisions in fleet tactics may be required because of trial disclosures and also the possibility that a number of innocent officers in the department may be brought into the case as persons who unwittingly assisted Farnsworth in collecting photographs, papers and other matter.

Youth Drowned In James River

Francis Wade, 20, of 500 Maryland avenue southwest, a former CCC worker, was drowned yesterday afternoon in the James River, near Lynchburg, as he tried to swim from the Amherst side of the stream to an isolated island, the Associated Press reported late last night.

After 2½ hours the body was recovered by Frank Kirby, diver of the Lynchburg Life Saving Squad, who hauled it 20 feet to the surface of the water.

Young Wade, according to the Associated Press, either became exhausted during the course of the 100-yard swim, or was seized with cramps and went down within 50 feet of the island.

A companion, swimming with him, became exhausted and almost lost his life in a futile rescue attempt.

Torture Story Branded False, Police End Case

Bell Woman Will Appear Today on Charge of Robbing Veteran.

Washington's modern "Midsummer Night's Dream" came to an end yesterday.

Branding her story of mutilation by gangsters as a "fabrication of falsehoods," Capital and New York investigators last night ended their investigation of Margaret Louise Bell's fantastic torture tale and announced she would be held on robbery charges pending extradition to Baltimore.

The 21-year-old self-styled victim of a New York vice ring will be arraigned in Police Court this morning, accused as a fugitive from justice. Her attorney, Thomas Lodge, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, said she would fight charges of robbing a Washington veteran of $700 bonus money during a drinking party in the Maryland city several weeks ago.

Semihysterical after facing—and failing to identify—the two men she accused of figuring in the alleged underworld vengeance attack, the auburn-haired young woman again was lodged in the Police Women's Bureau early yesterday. She denied the robbery charges brought by Philip R. Davis, 38, now in Mount Alto Hospital.

Group Will Make Eastern Rail Study

New York, July 16 (AP).—A committee of study co-ordination of railroad facilities in the East was announced today by the Eastern Presidents' Conference.

It was in line with a move by the Association of American Railroads to carry on the studies undertaken by the office of the Federal Co-ordinator of Transportation, which expired recently.

The Eastern group is headed by M. W. Clement, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Other members are C. E. Denney, president of the Erie; H. S. Palmer, trustee of the New York, New Haven & Hartford; E. W. Scheer, president, the Reading Company-Cenrtal Railroad Co. of New Jersey, and F. E. Williamson, president of the New York Central.

Drought Artificial.

Atlanta, Ga., July 16 (U.P.) Artifwhen a water main burst and interrupted the city's water supply for three hours today, had its chief effect on citizens' counsciences. During the interruption, 50 or more heads of homes hurried into water department offices to pay their bills and left with red faces when informed why their taps had failed to function.

no immediate plans for taking the body to Dubuque.

New Deal Advocate.

Senator Louis Murphy was one of the strongest and most consistent supporters of the New Deal's agricultural policies, advocating the payment of benefits to farmers under the AAA and upholding the soil conservation subsidy program.

"Better trial with the danger of error than no trial at all," he once said of the agricultural program.

Elected in 1932 Landslide.

Born in Dubuque, Iowa, November 6, 1875, Louis Murphy had scant practical experience in politics until he was elected to the Senate in the Roosevelt landslide of 1932. For 20 years he followed his father's career as newspaper reporter and editor. In 1913 he became collector of internal revenue for Iowa, a job he held eight years. Later he was an income tax collector for 11 years.

In winning his seat in the Senate he defeated Henry Field, Republican, and Senator Smith W. Brookhart, Progressive.

Before coming to Washington four years ago, Murphy had lived all his life in his native Dubuque, where he was educated in public grade and high schools.

Wife, Five Children Survive.

In 1917 he married Ellen Emma McGuire. In addition to his wife, he is survived by five children, Charles, Mary, Elinor Ann, Imelda and Ellen.

Senator Murphy's death was the second recent fatality among the Iowa Congressional delegation and was the sixth in the present United States Senate.

Representative B. M. Jacobsen (Democrat), of Clinton, Iowa, succumbed about a month ago at a Rochester, Minn., hospital. Senators who have died are Bronson Cutting, of New Mexico; Huey Long, of Louisiana; Thomas D. Schall, of Minnesota, and Duncan U. Fletcher and Park Trammell, of Florida.

Capitol Flags Lowered.

Immediately after word was received here of Senator Murphy's fatal accident, flags on the Capitol were lowered to half-staff where they will remain until after the funeral.

Senator Dickinson, of Iowa, and two Representatives from Iowa are expected to be among those named by the Senate and House sergeants at arms to attend the funeral services. The Senate sergeant at arms, acting for Vice President Garner, will select four members of the Upper House to represent the Senate at the services.

Meanwhile, expressions of regret over Senator Murphy's death were expressed by Capital leaders. Attorney General Cummings, terming the Iowan "a close friend," said he was "deeply distressed by the news."

"I have the highest admiration for his outstanding ability and his devotion to the public interest," said the Attorney General.

Senator Burke, of Nebraska, declared:

"In all the Senate there was no man who had as clear an understanding of the farm problem, particularly as it related to the corn and wheat sections. A great many Senators told me they relied on Senator Murphy's judgment more than on any other one man's in making up their minds on matters pertaining to farm legislation."

D. C. Boys' Club To Get Share of Concert Funds

Wallenstein Will Arrive Today to Rehearse Program for Sunday.

The Washington Summer Concerts Association, whose inaugural concert at the Watergate will be Sunday night at 8 o'clock, announced yesterday through its chairman and business manager, Thomas J. Mullikin, that a definite portion of the proceeds from the first concert will go toward the fund now being raised throughout the city in aid of the development of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club, which is proving so splendid an effort toward removing juvenile delinquency in the Capital City.

The concert will be conducted by the distinguished musical director and cellist, Alfred Wallenstein, who has made a name for himself as a conductor at the Hollywood Bowl and as guest conductor of the Los Angeles Symphony.

Wallenstein will arrive in Washington late today to conduct final rehearsals tomorrow and Sunday morning.

The program Sunday will comprise the immortal Fifth Symphony of Beethoven; also Overture to "Secret of Suzanne," by Wolf-Ferrari; Siegfried's Rhine Journey, by Richard Wagner; Valse Triste, by Sibelius; the new "Tom Sawyer," by Dubensky, and overture-fantasie "Romeo and Juliet," by Tschaikowsky.

There will be no soloist on the initial program. On Wednesday night, Conductor Wallenstein will present as guest soloist, Eunice Norton, pianist, and on Friday, Joseph Coleman, violinist.

Season books of tickets still are available at the Homer L. Kitt Co., the A. A. A. Ticket Bureau and the office of the Washington Summer Concerts Association, Room 612, District National Bank Building, 1406 G street. After Sunday night's concert no further season books will be available. Tickets at all prices will be on sale at the Water Gate on both upper and lower level Sunday, beginning at 6:30 p. m. Prices are $1, 50c and 25c. There also are seats at the Watergate on the steps that are open to the public, free of charge.

Ruth Nichols Get License.

New York, July 16 (AP).—Ruth Nichols, Rye (N. Y.) aviatrix, today obtained a renewal of her pilot's license at Roosevelt Field, Long Island. Severely injured in a crash at Troy a few months ago, Miss Nichols went for a practice flight with an instructor before taking her tests.

Slovak League Will Seek Unity Of Slavs in U. S.

Resolutions Adopted by 40 Organizations at Rally in Washington.

Resolutions designed to bring closer relations among 1,000,000 Americans of Slav origin were adopted by representatives of 40 organizations comprising the Slovak League of the United States, in session at the Mayflower Hotel last night.

Although general sessions were concluded, several of the groups are due to have further meetings today.

Formation of a "fraternal congress" within the league was considered by officials of major importance. Plans were discussed whereby there might be a banding together of the various fraternal societies for the distribution of benefits to the Slovak people.

Long-sought consolidations in thought and action were brought about by the medical and professional group and the newspaper group.

Sessions have been participated in by approximately 150 delegates. Four Slovak scholars—Josef Hronsky, Josef Cincik, Karol Flicka and Konstantin Culen—represented the Arts and Science Institute of the organization.

Dr. Peter P. Hletho, of Chicago, president of the conference, presided at the general sessions.

28 Earth Shocks Felt in Northwest

Spokane, Wash., July 16 (AP).—Recurring earth shocks frightened residents and left some property damage in the Pacific Northwest today.

The heaviest quake, at 11:15 o'clock, Pacific Standard Time, last night, drove terrified Spokane residents into streets and parks, but apparently inflicted its greatest damage at Milton-Freewater, Ore., 150 miles southwest of here.

Between the time of the first quake and 6:30 a. m., residents of Milton-Freewater counted 28 shocks.

A corner of a bus station collapsed at Milton-Freewater. The smokestack of the $200,000 Milton Union High School was cracked. A concrete dwelling at nearby Umapine, Ore., was demolished. Brick chimneys fell at Walla Walla, Wash., and several other places. The shocks broke a Spokane water main.

San Diego, Calif., more than 1,200 miles to the south, also experienced three quakes last night beginning at 8:39½ p. m. But they were sufficiently pronounced to be felt by only a few persons.

turned to the academy with a squadron of seven planes that came up from Langley Field, Va.

The Midshipmen, all members of the second class, which is studying aivation at the academy this summer, were:

Frank C. Lynch, Kansas City, Mo.; Alan R. McFarland, Philadelphia, Pa.; Lionel T. McQuiston, Brownstown, Ind.; Alphonse Minvielle, San Francisco, Calif.; Nels R. Nelson, Jamestown, N. Y.; Bolton S. Rankin, Paris, Tex., and Wilmer E. Rawie, Grand Forks, N. Dak.

Weekly Trips.

With 49 other midshipmen they took off with a squadron of eight planes today to fly to Langley Field for instruction in the laboratories maintained there by the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics. Groups of midshipmen make the trip to the field each week by plane, leaving in the morning and returning to the academy in the afternoon.

The seven midshipmen were in a plane piloted by Lieut. E. J. S. Young, U. S. N. He was accompanied by a second pilot and two mechanics. Lynch, McFarland, Minvielle and Rankin are members of the Navy football squad. Lieut. Thomas J. Hamilton, U. S. N., and coach of the football team, was one of the pilots in another of the planes of the squadron.

Polish General Killed.

Warsaw, July 16 (AP).—Poland's airforce chief, Gen. Gustav Orlicz-Dreszer, lost his life with two other officers in an airplane crash today, just as the ship carrying his wife home from the United States appeared on the Baltic horizon.

The other vicitims were aviation Col. Loth and Capt. Lagiejski, who were flying with the general toward Gdynia. There, Orlicz-Dreszer had planned to meet his wife, arriving on the liner Pilsudski.

Holiday-makers at Orlowo, a suburb of Gdynia, saw the plane crash into the sea several hundred yards from the shore. Boats sped to the machine towed it to a small pier, but the three occupants were dead.

Shortly afterwards the Pilsudski entered the harbor and the general's wife was taken to view the body.

Orlicz-Dreszer was 46 years old. His wife, the former Mrs. Elvira Bow, of Washington, has two daughters in the United States by another marriage. The general himself had visited the United States twice within the last year, as a passenger on the maiden voyages of the Pilsudski and Batory.

Cause of the accident was not known.

Wife Lived Here.

Mrs. Orlicz-Dreszer, a native of Atlanta, Ga., lived in Washington for 11 years. She previously was married to Roland H. Rowe, vice president of the United States Wholesale Grocers Association. They lived part of the time while here at 3039 Macomb street northwest, and part of the time in Chevy Chase with their two daughters, Margaret and Elvina.

Mrs. Orlicz-Dreszer was well known in Washington social and musical circles.

Senate Election Group to Watch Funds Closely

Plans Questionnaire for All Candidates; Two Aids Are Appointed.

Careful scrutiny of campaign expenditures is being mapped by the Senate's special committee named for that task, it was learned yesterday as Walter Myers, Indianapolis attorney, was named special counsel for the committee and Louis R. Glavis took over the post of chief investigator.

Myers was defeated by Senator Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, for the senatorial nomination in 1932. He was recommended for the committee post by Senator Minton (Democrat), of Indiana, and his appointment was announced yesterday by Senator Lonergan (Democrat), of Connecticut.

Glavis' resignation as head of the investigating unit of the Interior Department was announced formally by Secretary Ickes yesterday. In an exchange of letters the two men said they agreed that the work of the committee is "of such vital importance that we should not refuse the request which has been made" for Glavis' services. However, it has been known for some time that Glavis was dissatisfied with his status in the Interior Department, where his salary was $8,000 a year. He will receive $3,600 for aiding the committee.

Glavis was ousted from the Interior Department position by President Taft as a result of charges he filed against Secretary Richard A. Ballinger in connection with the Secretary's Alaskan conservation policies. Later he saw Ballinger's successor, Walter L. Fisher, reverse the Ballinger policies that he had attacked. More recently he was returned to the Interior Department as chief investigator.

Already, it was learned, the committee and its staff is working on a questionnaire to be sent to all candidates for President, Vice President and the Senate, and to all political organizations participating in those campaigns.

The candidates and organizations will be asked such questions as what campaign contributions have been made; what promises if any, have been extracted; whether money has been borrowed for political purposes, with the amounts and names of lenders, and other financial matters incident to the campaign.

Other members of the campaign funds committee, in addition to Lonergan and Minton, are Senators Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington; Austin (Republican), of Vermont, and LaFollette (Progressive), of Wisconsin. The committee has a $30,000 appropriation for expenses.

Future School To Have Radio, Short Classes

Dr. Bristow Gives Talk on 'Visual Education' at P.-T.A. Congress.

Marionettes and puppets, radios and phonographs, television and talking pictures, musicals and dramas, vacations and shorter class periods—all will play a major role in the school of tomorrow.

Such was the picture painted yesterday by Dr. William H. Bristow, general secretary of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, in an address on "Visual Education," given before the Maryland Parent-Teacher Congress, in session at College Park.

"Both children and adults are more interested in the realistic and concrete than in the abstract and symbolic," he said.

"Visual-sensory aids are vital to successful teaching and learning because they furnish this concrete element necessary to effective understanding."

Held Foundation.

Sensory experience was described as "the foundation of intellectual activity." Observation, it was claimed, does not mean merely looking at something. It is rather a combination of the eye plus the mind.

"The concrete is more easily understood than the abstract. An oral, written or printed word means nothing to the child until translated into a mental image. The use of the concrete and realistic is increasingly important in modern education," the speaker declared.

Dr. Bristow said the visual-sensory aids would increase initial learning, effect economy of time in learning, increase permanence of learning and aid in teaching difficult principles.

H. S. Callowhill, Baltimore Playground Athletic League director, who spoke on "Recreation" at the afternoon session, said it "must be remembered that athletes are seldom struck by automobiles or street cars."

Lack Directed Program.

"People who drive cars are well acquainted with the person who stands directly in their path and does not seem to know in which direction to go. You can be assured that these people did not benefit from a well-directed program or play."

Other speakers on the day's program included Miss Adelene Pratt, State librarian, who spoke on "Library Service," and R. C. Lamb, who spoke on "Legislation."

Blum Is Voted Bank Control; Bars Inflation

Program Proposed to Ban Government Influence by Board of Regents.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, July 16.—The French government rushed to Chamber enactment today a measure to give it control of the Bank of France.

Officials promised, as the bill was approved by a Chamber of Deputies vote of 430 to 111, to refrain from using its new powers for inflation.

Vincent Auriol, finance minister, told critics the government was opposed to inflation.

Other government spokesmen declared the measure was intended to break the power of 200 families which own but 170,000,000 francs in stock, while small shareholders hold 1,400,000,000 francs' worth.

On the other hand, opposition deputies criticized the number of functionaries on the proposed bank board, and assailed what they said was government failure to provide a body more representative of the shareholders.

After a morning of debate, a vote on a bill to nationalize war industries was postponed until Friday.

Blum's government already has financed itself through the Bank of France, the nation's top financial institution. Its leaders have indicated they want to fix the bank's 136-year-old charter so the board of regents may no longer influence governments, as it is supposed to have done in the past.

Blum's bill will:

1. Supplant the present board of 15 regents with a board of 30 directors.

2. Permit small shareholders to vote in the election of ten directors.

3. Abolish the requirement that the governor of the bank own 100 shares of its stock.

Under the bank's present charter, drawn up by Napoleon, the board of regents have been elected since 1800 by the 200 largest stockholders. From that rule came the election campaign attack on the "200 families" by Blum's Leftist followers.

To these, the 200 were known as "money barons," the "money wall" and the "financial oligarchy."

Places on the board of regents were handed down in family dynasties, the Leftists charged. The records show there has been a member of the Mallet banking family, for instance, on the board ever since the bank's founding. Ernest Mallet, the present regent, is the fourth of the line.

Mexico Power Strike Darkens 500,000 Homes

60,000 Workers Are Idle as 4,000 Factories Shut Down.

By the Associated Press.

Mexico City, July 16.—A strike of 3,000 electric power company employes tonight held an estimated 60,000 workers idle in the heart of Mexico.

Vicenten Lombardo Toledano, secretary-general of the Mexican Confederation of Workers, said approximately 4,000 factories and shops were paralyzed.

At the same time it was calculated unofficially that a half-million residences were without lights and 100,000 housewives were facing cold electric stoves.

Lombardo said the confederation's executive committee was meeting tonight to map a "program of moral and economic support of the strikers."

Minor profiteering in candles, kerosene and lamps was reported in the capital. Omnibuses were overcrowded as a result of a street car tie-up.

While water plants were included in the list of places granted emergency services by the strikers, many houses having individual electric pumps were threatened with water shortage.

Radio stations were silent, although dial telephones continued to operate with independent supplies.

Negotiations looking toward a settlement were resumed at the Presidential palace with no sign that the government would outlaw the strike.

The personal intervention of President Lazaro Cardenas was of no avail.

The government tried repeatedly to bring employes and officials of the Mexican Light and Power Co. together.

Luis Rodriguez, private secretary to President Cardenas, called an afternoon conference to adjust differences.

Strike plans called for a virtual cessation of light and power throughout the entire federal district, the States of Mexico, Morelos and Hidalgo and parts of Puebla and Michoacan.

Workers demanded pay increases totaling 1,000,000 pesos (about $278,000) annually.

Fur Coat Fete Will Feature Society Girls

Capacity House Expected at Shoreham Terrace Wednesday Night.

By Chanticleer.

The fashion-minded are expected to fill the Shoreham Terrace to capacity, and that would means about 1,500 persons, Wednesday night when the floor show will be featured by a Fur Coat Fete. Society mannequins will parade something like $65,000 of new fur fashions for fall—including rare eastern mink and Russian ermine models.

As usual, in case of rain, the big parade moves into the newly air-cooled ballroom. The fete will be repeated on several succeeding nights.

For this week, Ruthania and Malcolm headline a diversified floor bill. The Wiegand Troupe do aerial acrobatics and Jerry Lawton amuses everyone with a few rubber balls and a snare drum.

• • • •

If a troupe of male acrobats showed up in the local precincts, they'd get the razzberry. Reason: The Lotus is featuring a group of dancing lovelies this week who also know their pyramids and handstands. In fact, the gentlemen who perform in that line of stagework might get a lesson or two in how it's all done. Also present: Crater and Healy, Kay Koch, Franco and Faye and Mavis and Beatrice.

It still seems a little odd to be listing a floor show this time of year for La Paree. But here's the list: Virginia Lee, acrobatic specialist; Honey Dalzall, singing dancer; Flying Continentals and Al Sakol and his orchestra.

• • • •

Here's a brand new suburban spot—the Boulevard Showboat. The opening is set for Tuesday. Among the features are a ten-act show, dance orchestra, under the direction of Bill Abernathy, and a policy of beer and wine.

There's all kinds of reactions to hot weather. Take Matt Windsor's, for example. Your Russian Roof host reminds us that what is "one man's meat is another man's poison." In other words, most of us like to be cool when we are out for the evening and Host Windsor finds his roof is a very popular escape.

Daredevil Carl Bryson is continuing as a mild sensation at Maryland Club Gardens. He's the chappie who scoots over a 6-foot jump on water skis, towed by an autobile. Bryson insists he'll do a fire dive from the tower before he leaves the Gardens.

Jack and Roy, the old timers at the Mayfair Cafe of All Nations, with their piano-singing combination, are getting a bit of competition now from Danny Yuter, the Mayfair's new strolling violinist.

Don't forget about the dancing Wednesday through Saturday nights at the newly opened Boulevard Farms, Mount Vernon highway.

New addition to the artist roll at the Dude Ranch—Vic Gallo. But don't let the name fool you, because Vic is a girl, and one of the neatest rhythm tap artists on tap. Edith Bell is present in character imitations. Music is handled by the Club Carolina Orchestra.

Mildred Harris Chaplin makes her first appearance in a Washington nightery this week at the Cocoanut Grove. Supporting her are Gino and Giana, ballroom team; Eddie and Arline Kinley, rhythm team, the ten beautiful Pomeroy girls and other attractions.

They'll tell you up at the Powhatan Roof that baseball pitchers love to get out in the open, under the stars and all that sort of thing, after a hard afternoon in the broiling sun. Four of the pitching staff of the Nationals have been guests at the Powhatan since the season opened. My operatives report that Maxine Doyle dropped in a night or two ago.

Around the Town After Dark

The Federal Diary

By Betty Read.

Seven objectives during the next session of Congress are listed by groups of Government employes for their own benefit and betterment of working conditions.

As summarized by the American Federation of Government Employes they include the following:

The five-day week, already in effect for about half the civilian Government employes.

Extension of the merit system.

Thirty-year optional retirement for Government employes.

Automatic promotions.

Pay or compensatory time for overtime work.

An efficient machinery for transfers.

Full option for Veterans' Administration employes on the right to choose where they will accept Government deductions for living expenses in administration institutions.

"The Government is lagging in the matter of the five-day week," states the Government Standard, the official publication of the A. F. G. E.

"Prospects for the 30-year optional retirement plan are none too bright, for the change would mean added expense to the Government, the Standard points out. On the subject of automatic promotions, it declares that a civil service board of appeals is needed to prevent injustices and that an extension of the classification act to the field would mean elimination of many inequalities in pay and work. A minimum full-time pay of any Government job should be $1,500, the A. F. G. E. feels.

The youngest applicant to become a G-Man is 12-year-old Freddy Black, son a captain of a fishing boat at Miami, Fla. J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, explained that on his last fishing trip in Florida, the boy was waiting for him on the dock when he returned with a day's catch.

The boy shyly made his request to become a G-man. Hoover explained that he would have to wait until he was 25 years old at least. The boy knew all about that, but insisted that he wanted his application in so that he could come to Washington on his twenty-fifth birthday. Hoover tried to put him off with a laugh, but the boy quietly persisted. Finally Hoover capitulated and his application blank is now on file in the bureau headquarters.

Sunday's educational broadcast by the Office of Education and the Smithsonian Institution is the seventh in the new venture of telling the public what Government scientists and experts are doing these days. By dramatizing events which are matters of routine work to these specialists the Commissioner of Education, Dr. J. W. Studebaker, feels Uncle Sam is doing a good job in giving his citizens a little easy-to-take knowledge.

Last week more than 2,000 letters came to the two agencies running the weekly broadcasts, about 500 of them reaching here in one day.

Studebaker is now on the West Coast giving a series of speeches to educational institutions following his attendance at the annual convention of the National Education Association in Portland, Oreg. Before he departed on his barnstorming trip he declared the purpose of the projects was to provide "listenable" educational radio programs—the first time such programs have been provided in just this way anywhere in the country. At present the project is working on WPA funds, but the commissioner has plans for making the programs a permanent part of the Office of Education.

Last week's program was on the history of transportation and among the letters received at the office this week was one from Mrs. Annette Covington, of Cincinnati, a descendant of Robert Fulton, inventor of the steamboat.

This Sunday's broadcast is on "Visitors From the Skies." It sounds like a Jules Verne novel, but it really is a popularized scientific explanation of meteorites, comets and other celestial bodies. The presence in the sky of the Peltier comet, the first comet to be visible to the naked eye in ten years, is the pivotal point of the program.

It will be at its brightest August 4, and many remember its discovery last May which amazed astronomers. L. C. Peltier, a garage mechanic, of Delphos, Ohio, picked it out of the sky with his homemade telescope and embarassed the scientific world for having missed such a phenomenon.

Government men directing the broadcasts include James Prindle 3d, specialist in adult education in the Office of Education; Webster P. True, Smithsonian Institution editor; Leo S. Rosecrans, script director; William D. Boutwell, editor in chief of the Office, and other members of both Government agencies.

Before the program is presented, an advisory committee of Government experts sits to review it to insure its accuracy.

During a recent trip through the South, Andrew W. Cruse, chief of the Electrical Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, drove 3,500 miles and delivered 13 speeches in 19 days, thereby hanging up a record for work for the department.

The United States Civil Service Commission has announced that it will accept applications not later than the date mentioned in each case for the following named positions:

Junior home economics specialist, various optionals, $2,000 a year, Bureau of Home Economics, Department of Agriculture. Closing date, August 3.

Fire-prevention officer, $3,200 a year; Forest Service, Department of Agriculture. Closing date, August 3.

Legislative reference assistant, $2,300 a year, Social Security Board. Closing date, August 3.

Extension specialist in parent education, $4,600 a year, Department of Agriculture. Closing date, August 10.

The last-mentioned job caught our attention and we find that the job will go to some woman who can tell the farmers' wives how to bring up their children, how to dress them properly, provide them with suitable reading lists, and hold meetings to discuss child psychology and other problems of parents.

Culbertson on Bridge

Ghost of the Past.

In my morning's mail I received a letter from a Chinese student in Shanghai. He craved my assistance in the solution of a hand that had been given him with the challenge that he would be unable to make the stipulated contract of six spades. He was unable, he said, and would I please "help his head not to ache" by rushing the proper directions?

There was something vaguely familiar about the hand that piqued my curiosity. Not that it was so difficult [a more or less routine double squeeze play], but I knew I had seen it before. Finally the light dawned. It was one of the sixteen original World Bridge Olympic hands, made up by myself in 1932. This was it:

West, dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

	NORTH
	♠ 10 3 2 ♥ J 7 2 ♦ Q J 10 9 3 2 ♣ Q
WEST		EAST
♠ A Q J 7 6 5 ♥ A 5 ♦ 3 ♣ K 6 5 3		♠ K 9 ♥ K 10 6 ♦ A 7 6 4 ♣ A 8 4 2
	SOUTH
	♠ 8 4 ♥ Q 9 8 4 3 ♦ K 5 ♣ J 10 9 7

The bidding suggested in the par sheets circulated immediately after the event was:

West	North	East	South
1 spade	Pass	3 no trump	Pass
5 spades	Pass	6 spades	Pass
Pass	Pass

While it cannot be denied that the correct contract was reached, it would appear that there was a grave danger, from West's point of view, that he was stopping short of a lay-down grand slam. Today East would need greater honor strength to bid three no trump over one spade, the modern trend being to hold a little in reserve in responses, rather than "stretch."

The play goes as follows:

North opens the club queen; declarer counts his losers and sees that his only danger [assuming that the trumps do not lie five in one hand] is that clubs will not break and that two club tricks, therefore, may be lost. To guard against this possibility, he prepares for a squeeze. He wins the first trick with the club king, and, in order to "get a count" on the opponents' hands, begins the elimination of the diamond suit. A diamond to the ace, and a diamond ruff, followed by the lead of a spade to dummy's king, and the ruff of a third diamond discloses the fact that North originally held six diamonds [South failing to follow on the third round]. The adverse trumps are drawn, dummy discarding a club, and then a club is led toward dummy. When North fails to follow, the bad news is out. Declarer must not make the mistake of winning this trick with the ace. He must duck in dummy, in order to set the stage for the necessary squeeze. South wins and, let us say, returns a club. [No other lead would change the result.] Dummy's ace wins; declarer leads to his heart ace, and the situation stands.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

Off the Beaten Track.

In a thoughtless moment, or rather a rash moment at the St. Regis Tuesday night, some of us decided to see Marlene Dietrich off on the Normandie the next morning . . . Your correspondent got to sleep at 4 a. m., and was aroused at 7 a. m. . . . His condition was slightly bloodshot, but the Sullivans have no quit in them . . . At 9 o'clock, we were aboard the giant liner . . . In fluent French, Dorothy di Frasso asked the steward for a cup of coffee . . . In French equally fluent, he explained that unless we were passengers, we could not get a cup of coffee . . . "Why me and Marlene are like this," I expostulated, interwining the fingers of my right hand . . . The fellow was adamant . . . At 9:55, 5 minutes before the boat sailed, La Dietrich sailed in with maids, bodyguards, camera men, newspaper men, newspaper women and autograph hounds forming a flying wedge . . . She looked very tasty in a white jacket, dark skirt, black hat and blue veil that fluttered in the harbor breezes.

KAY FRANCIS.

• • • •

Flashlights exploded, voices buzzed . . . "My child is lost," wailed La Dietrich . . . "I put her in a separate cab to avoid the photographers—her car must have been tied up in traffic."

• • • •

But in the midst of the excited lamentations, a tall, competent-looking chap suddenly appeared from the inner room of the suite . . . His suit absolutely bulged with hardware . . . This was the youngster's bodyguard, and behind him you could see the 11-year-old daughter, Maria . . . The bodyguard looked at me hard and long, as if I might come from an old family of kidnapers, but I moved away from him . . . He had so much artillery on him that I was afraid in the heat he'd blow up and give all of us a 16-gun salute . . . Young Maria Dietrich's finishing school will undoubtedly be Remington Arms, or the du Pont powder mills.

• • • •

Of all the flicker stars, I'd say that Marlene Dietrich is the least impressive off screen . . . Claudette Colbert, Kay Francis, Loretta Young—all of these are as good looking in real life as they appear to be on celluloid . . . But La Dietrich, who is more glamorous than any of them on the screen, doesn't measure up to her screen images in real life . . . Her nose, which appears on celluloid as a tiny straight schnozz, actually is broad . . . The high cheekbones, however, and the lips and the eyes are photographically perfect . . . And the Dietrich legs are just as alluring, off screen, as they are in pictures . . . They need no makeup, these legs . . . But the general effect is one of disappointment . . . I can call to mind at least 20 girls who are more stunning than Marlene Dietrich . . . Her bank account is proof that my judgment is faulty.

• • • •

Viennese Roof, atop the St. Regis, continues to flourish under the personal direction of 44-year-old Vincent Astor . . . William K. Vanderbilt, Irene Castle McLaughlin, Serge Obolensky, Allan Ryan, Marlene Dietrich, Ellen Barry, Cole Porter, the Bert Taylors and the George Marshalls are typical of the interesting sophisticates to be found there of an evening.

• • • •

It is one of the few places in New York where formal dress is obligatory during the summer months, a selective precaution that insures the separation of the social sheep and goats . . . Vincent Astor and Obolensky decide the formula of the show that is presented, only lapse from formality being Paul Garritts, a roller-skater who works in white tie and tails.

Astor himself prefers Amos 'n' Andy to all other performers . . . At 7 o'clock each evening he disappears and tunes in on their program, while the Viennese ballet dancers and Garritts entertain the guests.

On the Air Today

Add to those other things influenced by the heat the golf driving contest under sponsorship of WRC's Gordon Hittenmark. The original plan was to have the women display their abilities one night, the men another. But now the two have been scheduled for one big competition—Friday night of next week.

Latest word on the rules: Each contestant will have two practice shots and then the best ball of the next three driven will be the competitor's score. After all contestants have had their fling, those with highest scores will go into the finals. Distance is governed by where the ball lights, not where it rolls. (Better be bringing 'em up, brother.)

More than 50 have signed thus far. Further details are available from Timekeeper Hittenmark at WRC.

Letter to Uncle Arthur Godfrey:

Dear Arthur: Last Saturday afternoon, in an innocent and unguarded moment, I suggested to your secretary that you might have some fun with the "knock, knock" game which Sid Olson, of The Post staff, introduced to the helpless members of the newsroom staff.

Since your "Moon Dial" Saturday night the "knock, knock" epidemic has become serious. Telephone operators call their friends, using assorted nom de plumes, ranging from Anna to Zella. Answering the telephone is next thing to attending a carpenter's convention.

Not that I complain. But what pains me is the fact I have met with all sorts of accidents for weeks in trying to get my favorite ditty, "I'm Getting Sentimental Over You," played on your trusty turntable without interruption. And Wednesday night the tune lasted just 19 seconds before it was nipped in the bud—due to an assortment of things, including many very funny "knock, knocks."

How's about giving us "Getting Sentimental" just once without infiltrations of commercial copy, announcer's identifications, fan mail—and time steals for "knock, knock" and such? C'mon, Arthur, break down.

Townsendites' Parley Is Like 3-Ring Revival

Palm Leaf Fans Wave, Galluses Predominate at Convention.

A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, Ohio, July 16.—This Townsend Convention resembles nothing so much as an old-fashioned revival meeting. Like the theatrical producers who improved Uncle Tom's Cabin by using three Uncle Toms, Dr. Townsend has improved upon the Billy Sunday meetings by using at least three Billy Sundays. Billy himself in his best days of chasing the Devil around a pulpit could not have improved upon the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin's gesture of ripping off his coat and collar as he tore into President Roosevelt.

The Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, successor to Huey Long in the Share-the-Wealth movement, and the Rev. Clinton Wunder, one of the original Townsendites, displayed pulpit manners on a par with the wildest of the evangelists.

But the similarity does not end there. There is a religious fervor, perhaps even hysteria in the crowd. The audience which almost filled the great convention hall today was ready to respond to anything, and it did.

Ninety per cent of the audience is composed of people above middle age. There are hundreds of ample, motherly looking women. There are men bowed with years of labor. Although the weather is much cooler than it has been in Washington, the whole audience seems to sway with the movement of palm-leaf fans and folded newspapers. There are not a dozen men in the place wearing coats, and the variety of galluses is amazing.

There is a shout at the end of nearly every sentence of every speaker. It appears to make no difference what he has said. There are even some shouts of "amen" here and there. These people are in earnest. They have the spirit of a crusade. The fine points make no difference to them. They don't know or don't care that the leaders are quarreling among themselves. They don't want reason, but they love oratory.

And they are getting it. There hasn't been a speaker on the program yet who didn't far surpass in oratorical ability anyone who spoke at either of the old party conventions. Just a little more than a month ago the Republican convention was held in this same hall. One cannot help wondering what would have happened had Senator Steiwer or Herbert Hoover possessed the pulpit-pounding and rabble-rousing ability of a Coughlin, a Smith or a Wunder.

Text of Father Coughlin's Address Before Townsend Clubs' Convention in Cleveland

Cleveland, July 16.—The text of the Rev. Father Charles E. Coughlin's address before the National Convention of Townsend Clubs here today, follows:

Mr. Chairman, Dr. Francis E. Townsend, the Rev. Dr. Gerald Smith, ladies and gentlemen from every State in the Union:

It is my happy privilege to be here this morning on the invitation of Dr. Townsend. I feel that I will not be able to speak to you very lengthily because I have lost my voice somewhere between Virginia and Minnesota on a tour that I was making, speaking to the officers of the National Union of Social Justice, and thus I am inflicting this rasping sound upon you at your own displeasure.

It is not my privilege to come here, ladies and gentlemen, to convince you, were it necessary to convince you, and I choose not to convince you of what resolutions you should pass at this convention.

It isn't my purpose even to endeavor to persuade you upon any future policy which you and your leaders will adopt. I come before you, however, to advise you of a few policies of the National Union for Social Justice that you may compare them, to tell you some resolutions adopted by the National Union, in order that they may be safeguards to direct you either to follow along and examine, or to reject them.

Not a Political Party.

First of all, the National Union for Social Justice is not a political party, nor will it ever become one. It is true that we are interested in government, just the same as the United States Chamber of Commerce, just the same as the American Liberty League, just the same as the Veterans of Foreign Wars, just the same as are the bankers.

Nevertheless we are not a political party, but with our strength we are determined to influence good government, just the same as the major number of those whom I have mentioned are endeavoring to inflict bad government upon us.

Government in this beloved Nation of ours is represented by its three branches: the legislative branch, where the laws are made; the executive branch, where the laws are enforced; and the judicial branch where the laws are adjudged to be in harmony with our Constitution before they can be enforced.

Naturally, we have no quarrel with the Constitution of the United States, because it has been gotten under the past grand work established by both Democrats and Republicans. Ever since the founding fathers established our Constitution it appears that Congress has the right to coin and the right to regulate the value of money.

Both Democrats and Republicans have forfeited that right until today the Federal Reserve banks, like Congress, have the right to coin and regulate the value of money, so that it causes 11 million unemployed to tramp on our streets, so that it has put the farmers off their homesteads, so that it has made beggars of the millions of the aged heroes who with their hands have wrought this country into the beautiful land it is today.

Asks Expulsion.

The day has arrived when we must expel those who have forgotten our Constitution.

Thus, the National Union for Social Justice is not established upon any radical excursion into the wilderness of socialism, communism and anarchism, nor on the other hand to those die-hard Tories and hoop-skirt politicians who profit in telling us in season and out of season that we must support the Roosevelts and the Landons of today with their love feasts on the banquet table of America for the money changers.

These principles of political change are the guiding star of the National Union for Social Justice, the Christian, the American and the constitutional.

Relative to our participation in politics: We have arrived at the conclusion that no candidate for Congress of the United States can receive the indorsement of the National Union unless, while in Congress he has proven himself sympathetic to the principles of social justice, or if he is a new candidate, by his having pledged himself publicly to support the 16 principles of social justice, regardless of the Democratic platform or the Republican platform.

The 1932 platform of the Democratic Party will take its place in the annals of American literature with the Gettysburg address of the great Lincoln. The inaugural address delivered on the streets of Washington on March 4, 1933, will be lived up to in practice at some future date and then we will have rendered complete the Gettysburg address of the Emancipator Lincoln. But the heart that conceived that platform and uttered that inaugural address has lacked that divine spark known to human children of the Lord, the spark of truthfulness and the spark of sincerity.

Cites Debt.

As far as the National Union is concerned, no candidate who is indorsed for Congress can campaign, go electioneering for, or support the great betrayer and liar, Franklin D. Roosevelt, he who promised to drive the money-changers from the temple and succeeded in driving the farmers from their homesteads and the citizens from their homes in the cities.

He who promised to drive the money-changers from the temples has built up the greatest debt in all history, $35,000,000,000, which he permitted the bankers the right, without restriction, to spend, and for which he contracted that you and your children shall repay with 70,000,000,000 hours of labor to farms, to factories or places of business.

Seven seconds to coin the money and 70,000,000,000 hours to pay it back! Is that driving the money-changers from the temple?

He who advocated the doctrine of good neighborliness with his right hand, lent the communistic ear of both Protestant and Catholic, nor assisted them in lifting up their cause. Is that good neighborliness?

For those two reasons which I have not time to amplify for you, the National Union for Social Justice will not indorse any candidate if he is a Democrat, who openly advocates the re-election of the great betrayer, Franklin Delano Roosevelt. On the other hand, ladies and gentlemen, what is our stand for the Republicans?

I am cognizant of the history following the World War. I know of their Hardings and Coolidges; their Hoovers and their gold standards, and I know that people were prostrate—how we, following the war, canceled $40,000,000,000 of European war debts and repudiated $11,000,000,000 more of post-war debts simply to save the international bankers, simply to save the gold standard, and today when Mr. Landon advocates the restoration into the Nation of the gold standard, I am forced to repudiate his philosophy and his platform as a return to the days of human slavery.

"Backed by Moscow."

It is most significant, my friends, that the hand of Moscow backs the Communist leaders in America and aims to pledge their support for Franklin Delano Roosevelt where communism stands.

Very likely in this assemblage this morning there are some politicians who are thinking more of their jobs and their patronage than they do of Dr. Townsend and his principles. Ladies and gentlemen, you have them here.

They raise their voices at the mention of the word democracy, but do they know the history of democracy in America? Study Andrew Jackson and his radical personal tax. Learn about the great fellow and his work. Who brought his ideas back and on what plank? The plank of driving the money changers from their temple. Did Jackson succeed? Why most certainly he did, because Jackson was a man of of his word.

Jackson restored to Congress the right to coin and regulate the value of money, which Alexander Hamilton stole from Congress. Shortly after Jackson died, those who still believed in his philosophy in their minds, but in whose hearts there wasn't the blood to carry their beliefs through, the old world democracy, identified themselves with the thoughts of the international bankers until they sold you out for a mess of pottage.

Is that democracy? Or what is democracy today? Is it some fact of the mind that begins at the Mason and Dixon Line and ends at the Gulf, or is it a label for political patronage with the seal, sign and stamp of "Farleyism" smeared all over it?

Does Democracy mean that we shall fail? Why should we pay men to work for less than living wages under the so-called WPA? Is that democracy?

Is it democracy for the President of this Nation to assume power over Congress, to browbeat the Congress, and to insist that his "must" legislation be passed? Is that democracy?

Or is it democracy for the President of the United States to say: "Pass this legislation whether it is constitutional or not?" Is that democracy?

"Drive Roosevelt Out."

Is it democracy, I ask, those who cling to the party of Andrew Jackson, to have our country filled with plutocrats or bureaucrats and their banks filled with unpayable debts, all to save the bankers? Is that democracy? I ask the Democrts from the South to define the history, to learn your true Andrew Jackson, and to explore those Communists who have seized the party reins of the Democrats and who are flogging their party with destructional patronage.

I ask you to purge the man who claims to be a Democrat from the Democratic Party, and I mean Franklin Double-Crossing Roosevelt.

Ladies and gentlemen, all those who are in favor of a free America from the double-crossing Democrats, and from the gold-standard Republicans stand up.

The time has come when the policies of the National Union be fought for unto death if necessary in this land of ours where there is so much intelligence and executive ability.

Why should there be want in the midst of plenty simply to satisfy the foreigners, the Rothschilds, the Europeans?

On this platform or somewhere in this audience there is a candidate, a Democrat indorsed by the National Union for Congress. His name is Martin Sweeney (of Cleveland), and I am going to ask a public question of Martin Sweeney:

"Although the National Union has indorsed you as a Democrat are you aware that if you support Roosevelt you lose that indorsement?"

("Mr. Sweeney: "I have answered by my criticism of Roosevelt during the last four years. I know he is a double-crosser. I stand with the National Union.")

The same holds from California to Maine. You can't be with us or against us at the same time.

Ladies and gentlemen, as I said before, we are wholly opposed to the Roosevelt taxes, dole and to the farm propaganda that has been spread through this Nation.

We are opposed, sympathetically, to poor Mr. Landon, the creature of three newspaper editors. He was never head of anything until these persons built him up out of nothing. Several months ago he wanted $300,000,000 of scrip money for taxes, and several months later he wanted to go back to the gold standard. He doesn't know whether he is going or coming.

There is only one avenue of escape for the down-trodden American people, and that avenue lies not on the highway of the Democratic and Republican parties, for both are—one the left wing and the other the right wing—the same bird of prey, the vulture, or the same thing, the banker.

And there is no escape from the ills which beset us by bringing them water of communism. We don't have to be communists, nor do we have to be bureaucrats. We have been Americans, with the slogan, "America for Americans." Today it is my happy privilege to announce to America that the National Union is not amalgamated either with the Townsend movement, nor with the share-the-wealth movement.

We are keeping our identity, but just as there is a theory of opposing the Republican, the Democrat and the Communist with their Landon and Roosevelt and the gold standard, opposing them of this huge monopoly, there is Dr. Townsend; there is the Rev. Dr. Gerald Smith. By those two leaders I stand four square.

Ladies and gentlemen, you haven't come here to indorse any political party. You stultify yourselves if you indorse the sellers, Roosevelt and your Landons. The principles of the National Union, the principles of Dr. Townsend and the principles of Dr. Gerald Smith have been incorporated in the new Union Party.

You are not asked to indorse it. * * * your beloved leader indorses them, and how many of you will follow Dr. Townsend?

In the meantime, ladies and gentlemen, watch your own Judas Iscariots who are taking 30 pieces of silver to sell you out. And thus I must leave for another speech this afternoon, and to tell you that I am willing to die in this struggle to liberate America from the money changers. God bless you.

Townsend and Coughlin

wish they hadn't invited him, and that they had left politics out of this convention.

In order to show that the feeling of the convention is not in favor of joining any political party, the "citizens maximi," as the advisory council of the organization calls itself, asked the convention to invite Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican candidate for President; President Roosevelt, and Norman Thomas, the Socialist candidate, to address the meeting. The resolution was passed almost unanimously.

Asked by Townsend.

Townsend himself has indorsed the third party. He is responsible for the presence of Coughlin and the invitation to Lemke. It is understood Townsend urged Coughlin, over the latter's protests, to come to Cleveland and help him out of an embarrassing situation. Coughlin merely succeeded in making matters worse.

That is one side of the story. The other is the animosity existing between the two Smiths. Gerald Smith joined forces with the Townsend movement after the share-the-wealth campaign began to crumble, following the death of Huey Long. He was welcomed by Townsend and immediately began an active part in the organization. Gomer Smith, who has been one of the original Townsend leaders, feels that he has been shoved out of the picture by his namesake. He made his feeling perfectly clear in his speech to the convention.

Gerald Smith is bitterly opposed to President Roosevelt. Gomer Smith is an ardent supporter of Roosevelt. The latter was defeated recently in the Oklahoma Democratic primary for the Senate. He blames his defeat on Gerald Smith's connection with the Townsend plan and his opposition to President Roosevelt.

Following adjournment of the day's session of the convention Townsend announced at a press conference his intention to ask Gomer Smith's resignation. Gerald Smith sat beside him as he made the announcement. He said he would ask for the resignation on the ground Gomer Smith had been "discourteous" and had attempted "to cause a rift in our peaceful convention."

Previously, Sheridan Downey, counsel for the Townsend organization, had told the convention he would indorse anything Gomer Smith had to say. Townsend said he did not know what steps he would take concerning Downey.

Asked if he would throttle free speech in the convention, Townsend said:

"These men can say what they please, but if I don't like what they say they will have to leave."

Townsend repeated his complete indorsement of Lemke for President, but added that he "did not mean to coerce any individual."

Townsend added he "absolutely agreed" with Coughlin that President Roosevelt is a "double-crosser and a liar."

Upon his entrance into the convention hall Coughlin was escorted down the main aisle amid the cheers of the crowd. When he reached the platform he threw his arms around Townsend. Then he, Townsend and Gerald Smith were photographed together with their arms around each other's shoulders.

Before Coughlin started speaking it was announced from the platform that "all speeches of a political nature will reflect only the opinions of the speakers themselves." It was stated the Townsend organization "remains nonpartisan and non-sectarian."

Coughlin said he was present at the invitation of Townsend, but that he was not attempting to influence the policies of the convention. He said the National Union for Social Justice, of which he is the head, is not a political party, but that it is working in the interest of good government.

Coughlin explained that his organization will indorse no candidate who does not approve its policies. At this point he called to his side Martin L. Sweeney, Democratic Representative from Cleveland, who has the Coughlin indorsement. He put him through a short catechism on the union policies. At the end Sweeney said, quietly, almost reverently, "I agree with you, Father Coughlin."

Coughlin then launched into his attack upon President Roosevelt. He said the President's inaugural address would have ranked with the Magna Charta, "but the voice that spoke that address lacked sincerity and truth."

"That address," he said, "was spoken by that great betrayer and liar, Franklin D. Roosevelt."

He then turned for a moment to Landon, charging that his gold standard stand means "return to economic slavery."

Assails Browder.

Returning to Roosevelt, he said that the President had the support of Earl Browder, Communist candidate for President.

"Where Browder stands I will not stand," he shouted.

"Is it democracy for the President to dictate to Congress?" he asked.

"No," chorused the crowd.

"Is it democracy to ask Congress to pass legislation whether it is constitutional or not?"

"No," shouted the crowd.

When the priest removed his coat and tore off his collar, the crowd went wild, standing on chairs and shouting. With his white, collarless shirt open at the neck, the unpriestly looking priest waved his arms and attempted to stop the demonstration. There were scattering "boos" among the cheers.

"So help me God," he said, "I am not going to desert the candidates, no matter what their party, whom we have indorsed."

The crowd yelled almost as loudly as it had for Coughlin.

Urges Backing Candidates.

"Back the men who are entitled to election regardless of the tail to their political kites," he said.

Downey introduced Gomer Smith with the statement that Smith would express his (Downey's) ideas. Smith remarked he would not take off either his coat or his collar. He added that neither would he wave a Bible. The latter reference was to Gerald Smith's use of the Bible in a speech yesterday.

"We had been advised," he said, "that this was a great nonpartisan movement. What a disappointment to find that the convention has been dipped in political debauchery, that men so forget their self-respect as to denounce the Chief Magistrate of this Nation."

Referring to his defeat in Oklahoma, he said, "I was put on the altar by men like Gerald Smith.

"Men who have fought, bled and died for the Townsend Plan have found themselves pushed aside to make room for a man who represents the share-the-wealth plan."

Will Continue Work.

Smith, nevertheless, he said, would continue to work for old-age pensions.

Referring to the Union Party, Smith asked:

"Shall the great Townsend organization go on a windmill expedition that means sure defeat?"

The crowd responded as enthusiastically as it had to Coughlin.

Townsend obtained recognition, and in the voice of a father scolding a naughty child, declared that "we are extremely sorry that Gomer is so hurt over his defeat, but let us assure him that one Senator does not make a Senate."

"Some people," he added, "cannot take a licking. I deplore that personalities should enter this convention and that they should be followed by vituperation. There is no reason why we should believe the movement is wrecked because one man has been disappointed in his political ambitions.

"Be compassionate with the fellow," he pleaded. "He is far from home, he is defeated, and he is homesick."

Why The Delay?

Three and a half months have elapsed since E. Barrett Prettyman resigned as corporation counsel. Yet no move appears to have been made to fill the vacancy. The delay is especially difficult to understand because of the prominent part Mr. Prettyman played in numerous activities of the local government. Prompt selection of a corporation counsel would seem to be one of the essential steps to keep the municipality functioning smoothly.

Just before Mr. Prettyman resigned Edward M. Curran, then an assistant corporation counsel, was elevated to the Police Court bench. The vacancy thus created also remains unfilled. Moreover, three attorneys in the corporation counsel's office are now on vacations. With an unusually heavy load of work for the summer period, the office is thus seriously handicapped. Add to this the uncertainty resulting from the absence of a permanent executive, and it would be surprising to find the office functioning with its customary efficiency.

Apparently the chief responsibility for this situation falls upon Commissioner Allen. Under the three-way division of duties among the Commissioners the corporation counsel's office falls directly under his supervision. Presumably the board is waiting for Mr. Allen's recommendation. His failure to make such a report appears to be the chief reason for the unnatural delay in filling this important post.

Certainly there is no lack of competent prosecutors and legal advisers available for a term as corporation counsel. Two experienced attorneys already holding responsible positions in the local government are known to be active candidates. One is Assistant Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal and the other is People's Counsel William A. Roberts. Either would fill the position admirably, and other specialized talent is at hand.

Officials responsible for filling positions of this sort are often subjected to stultifying political pressure. Sometimes they are hampered by other considerations unknown to the public. It does not seem likely, however, that these difficulties will be minimized by delay. A corporation counsel should be chosen without further procrastination.

True To Form.

Many years have passed since any would-be assassin has attempted the life of a British monarch. Nor, indeed, do the accounts of the demonstration made yesterday against Edward VIII indicate that it was other than the mad action of an individual so mentally deranged as to be only fortuitously dangerous. But while the whole world rejoices that the incident was not more serious, it will also applaud the thoroughly English manner in which the crowd and the police behaved at a moment that might, for all they knew, be fatal to their King.

When Alexander of Jugoslavia was murdered at Marseilles, the attendant guards hacked the assassin to death on the scene. But at London, we read, there was a half-second's struggle and then the assailant was quietly conveyed to Scotland Yard, there to be remanded like any other disturber of the peace. Meanwhile the unexcited King rode on at the head of his troops and later spent the afternoon playing golf, though as to his score the reports are silent.

English stolidity is apt to be annoying when a crisis is observed upon the horizon. But it is a very comfortable quality when an unexpected crisis suddenly arrives.

Reinforcement Needed.

Reports from the Parole Board in recent years may be summarized in the two words "inadequate funds." The account of the board's activities which has just been sent to the Commissioners is no exception. "Our staff and facilities," the communication reads, "are still inadequate. We are still without funds."

Under these conditions a completely satisfactory record could not be expected. Yet the parole system has been operating smoothly, with a number of gratifying results. Nine out of every ten men paroled by the board maintained perfect records. Only 5 per cent were convicted of new offenses. In view of the very inadequate supervision permitted under the board's meager budget that is an enviable record.

Results can never be entirely satisfactory, however, until ample supervision is provided. Parole is a misnomer without competent officers to aid the former prisoners and to supervise their activities. For such co-operative work is the essence of the enlightened idea of rehabilitating prisoners not yet habituated to crime.

This prolonged and irrational neglect of the parole system should be one of the first problems to engage the attention of the new Criminal Justice Commission. It is intimately related to the whole subject of crime in Washington. Reinforcement of the parole system is a field where a small sum of money could be most effectively spent in aiding the cause of law enforcement.

Reaping The Whirlwind.

With Father Coughlin's speech at Cleveland yesterday the expected has come to pass. The followers of the radio priest, of the late Senator Huey Long, and of the indefatigable Dr. Townsend, are merging in a single movement which is not the less formidable because it is cradled in abysmal ignorance and directed by utterly irresponsible bombast.

There is little likelihood that the weird triumvirate of Coughlin, Gerald Smith and Townsend will obtain any permanent rating in American history. Each of these leaders is of the type which comes to the surface of a democracy in a disturbed period; which depends for its power on a shrewd combination of evangelical oratory and unredeemable material promises. With firm national leadership and the return of a moderate degree of widespread prosperity the following of these rabble-rousers will melt away. But in the next few months they may easily play a considerable role upon the American stage.

Politically they promise to be very injurious to the re-election chances of President Roosevelt. This is not merely shown by the unrestrained attack made on him in the speeches of each member of the triumvirate at Cleveland. It is also inherent in the psychology of the New Deal.

For over three years Mr. Roosevelt has himself been promising the impossible, stirring class hatreds, praising fantastic experiments, assuring the populace that if they will only gang up at the counter the more abundant life will be lavishly ladeled out. It is only natural that those who have been fed from the White House on this diet should now be feeling their oats. It is only natural that they should turn to leaders who follow the Roosevelt technique but go it one better. The President has sowed the wind and the indications grow that on November 3 he will reap the whirlwind.

Under the shrewd attack now launched from within his camp, Mr. Roosevelt's composite following is likely to shred away like Napoleon's army on the retreat from Moscow.

The old Democratic leaders are already leaving it in such numbers that the contumely at first directed against a Jouett Shouse or an Al Smith no longer serves. Now it appears that in companies, rather than as individuals, the New Deal rank and file will follow other false gods just as enthusiastically as they at first responded to the more inhibited Tugwells, Warrens and Johnsons. It is well for Mr. Farley's peace of mind that he has been temporarily relieved of the burdens of the Postmaster General. For the rest of the campaign his will all too probably be the tragic task of seeking to avert mass defections from the so-called Democratic Party.

And little or nothing can be done by the Administration to offset the drift of those who are hypnotized by the revivalist tactics of the Cleveland evangelists. Their gibberish cannot be repudiated without repudiating much of the New Deal. It cannot be rivaled without forfeiting the support of every intelligent voter.

Quite possibly, of course, the new triumvirate will fly to pieces before the election. It has no element of solidity except the desire of all its supporters to get something for nothing. There is also a vast difference between the patent though misguided sincerity of Townsend and the carefully calculated agitation of Coughlin and Smith. But November is not far away, and the chances are that whatever bargains may be struck between this raucous trio will last that long.

Negligence Is Indicated.

The extent to which American naval secrets have been revealed to the Japanese by the alleged spying activities of John S. Farnsworth is not yet known to the public. Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation appear to have uncovered some important information. But the many ramifications of the case have not yet been fully explored. Indeed, because of the confidential nature of the data said to have been sold to the Japanese, the full story may continue to be surrounded by mystery.

In no circumstances, however, is there reason for excitement over the incident. Spying is unfortunately a routine activity of all military establishments. The United States naval building program has increased foreign curiosity as to our plans for defense on the high seas. If agents of Japan have found naval officers in this country so careless or so craven as to let official secrets slip from their possession, it is futile to condemn them for taking advantage of the situation. Resentment arising out of the incident, therefore, should be directed at espionage as a recognized system of gaining information, and at any negligence in our own Navy which may be revealed.

Before the trial of Mr. Farnsworth is over it is possible that the Navy will be called upon to answer some very pointed questions. The accused was dismissed from the service nine years ago. At that time he was supposed to surrender all confidential documents in his possession. How, then, did he obtain the secret data which he is alleged to have turned over to an agent of Japan?

If the charges against the former lieutenant-commander are sustained, a house-cleaning somewhere would seem to be in order. For Mr. Farnsworth could not have disposed of confidential information if it had been properly guarded by naval officers. As the case is now shaping up, its chief value—aside from the punishment of any traitors found guilty of revealing national defense plans—should be the closing of leaks through which confidential data has passed.

In this latter task the F. B. I. will doubtless render valuable service, as it already has done in the preliminary investigation. The public is inclined to associate the G-men almost exclusively with the fight against "public enemies." But that is only one phase of their numerous activities. Their participation in the current espionage probe is one reason for confidence that it will be thorough and dignified, even though it may eventually cast serious reflections in high quarters.

Hobson's Choice.

Although President Green of the A. F. of L. says that his executive council has not abandoned its demand for dissolution of the Committee for Industrial Organization, he is evidently doing his utmost to avert an open break. The recalcitrant unions have been given another opportunity to appear before the federation heads in their own defense. This delay will permit further negotiations between the contending factions, and Mr. Green frankly hopes that a settlement of differences may be reached.

Expulsion of unions affiliated with the C. I. O. might retard, but would not stop, the spread of industrial unionism. Nor will threats of disciplinary action by the A. F. of L.'s executive council be likely to arrest the organization drive launched by John L. Lewis and his supporters. In short, the present crisis in the ranks of labor cannot be dealt with intelligently and constructively merely by disciplining unions that can show good cause for disregarding the authoritative rules and orders of the established hierarchy.

Even if the executive council were to prove the formal validity of charges that the offending unions are "fomenting insurrection" within the A. F. of L., it would not be grappling with the really important question at issue in this dispute. That is simply whether industrial unionism shall grow with the approbation and encouragement of the federation, or whether it shall develop under new leaders outside the federation. The threatened conflict is due to the character of the parent organization, which is fighting to maintain the dominance of a form of craft unionism ill-adapted to the needs of modern mass-production industries.

Given a willingness to compromise, there are no insuperable obstacles to recognition of the claims of both types of unionism. In some cases the craft or trade union is the more logical type of bargaining agency; in others, organization along industrial lines is preferable. The fact that the craft union, with a preponderance of skilled and semi-skilled workers, is dominant within the A. F. of L. probably explains why such slow progress has been made in organizing the mass production industries, containing a large number of unskilled workers.

Structurally, the A. F. of L. has changed little during the past 50 years. Its affiliated unions are loosely held together by rules and regulations passed in convention and carried through by an executive council which exercises considerable discretionary power. The council itself is controlled by members whose industrial background and union affiliations make them unsympathetic toward the newer forms of industrial unionism.

So long as this organization set-up remains in control of the A. F. of L., any minority group that undertakes to force the pace of organization along industrial lines, seeking to embrace a larger area and bring in a more representative cross-section of the working population, will of necessity encounter opposition. It will have to proceed in defiance of constituted authority unless the dominant majority has the wisdom to make concessions and avert a split in the ranks of organized labor.

Any labor leader who places the cause he serves ahead of personal or political ambitions will certainly do all in his power to reconcile factional differences that carry a threat of disruption. As President Green says: "It is tough enough to function when labor is united; it is almost impossible to get anywhere when labor is divided."

And Now Senator Murphy.

The automobile accident in which Louis Murphy lost his life in Wisconsin yesterday raises to four the number of Senators who have met violent deaths during recent months. Senator Cutting was killed in an airplane disaster; Senator Schall was struck down by an automobile; Senator Long was assassinated. Now Senator Murphy is killed in the crash which usually accompanies a front-tire blowout. Fate has dealt harshly with the upper house of Congress lately.

In the publicity given to the accidental deaths of men of prominence, there is one value. It serves as an effective reminder of the dangers which follow in the train of modern civilization. Senator Murphy's passing will be widely mourned. But many a driver on the open road will be at least temporarily more careful because of it.

Jackson At Manassas.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I have noticed by recent articles appearing in the paper that plans are being made to re-enact the first battle of Manassas, and a great deal is being said about Stonewall Jackson. I think the people of this section are placing entirely too much credit on Jackson, as most anyone with any military experience could have handled the situation the same as Jackson did on Henry Hill, July 21, 1861.

The Federals had been fighting all day in a hot, blistering sun, and when Jackson's brigade stood "like a stone wall," there was very little to stand against, because these poor boys, inexperienced as they were in warfare, were completely exhausted, and Jackson, with a brigade of fresh troops, entering the fray at that time, the outcome could hardly have been otherwise.

I hope that you will publish this and let the people know that there is one man who doesn't think Jackson was so hot.

A Euclid Come To Judgment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Arithmetical accuracy would have saved that estimable political commentator, Mr. Frank R. Kent, from at least some of his current anxiety regarding the strength of the Townsend movement.

Writing in the Baltimore Sun on Thursday he notes that there are at least 9,000 delegates at the Townsend convention, each of them claiming to represent a club in which the minimum membership is 100.

"That," says Mr. Kent, "would make them represent some 9,000,000 people, all adults and presumably voters. Perhaps that is too large an estimate. Cut it in half and you still have a formidable bloc armed with the ballot."

But if you divide 9,000,000 by ten, in order to make the multiplication of 9,000 by 100 come out correctly, it isn't nearly as formidable as arithmetic seems to be for Mr. Kent.

Vice In Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I have just read your editorial in The Post of July 13 on "Vice In Washington." I agree that vice is not as great here as in New York and other metropolitan centers, but prostitution and soliciting is at its height on the streets of the city.

Seemingly, the policemen are blind to this group of women loitering on the streets at all hours of the night.

New Society Proposed.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Someone ought to start a Society for the Defense of the Constitution. They need not wear colored shirts, but they should be clothed in true patriotism and devotion to rightness. Their platform might be something like the following:

1. We are devoted to the Constitution of the United States, especially the Bill of Rights. Those who seek to break down the Bill of Rights in the name of military efficiency or for any other purpose are not true Americans. Such people may fiercely condemn the Communists, yet they are themselves no better than the Communists, and they are even more dangerous than the Communists. The Communists are like barking dogs, but those who try to nullify the Constitution are like ravening wolves.

2. We believe in the Constitution as it is, which means including Article V. This article provides for making changes in the Constitution in the light of experience; and such provision is part of the original scheme of the Constitution. It is one of the most important elements in the value of this great document.

Parks and Praise.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Persons riding up and down Fourteenth street are now remarking on the beauty of Franklin Park as it is evoluting from its former crude appearance to its fast approaching elegance. The same may be said of Lafayette Park. Here is wisdom.

James Bryce said: "To the majority of mankind nothing is more agreeable than to escape the need of mental exertion; to most of the people, nothing is more troublesome than the effort of thinking." We are now to have in the coming Presidential campaign a series of dust storms that will obscure rather than make clear the truth. We look to the editors of our leading papers for sober, sane and unbiased thinking and writing. Let us have no more such terms as "vandalism" used when speaking of the unfinished work in our parks. If our leading editors are not to be trusted to give us truth from the standpoint of tolerance and far-sightedness, to what source may we look for it? I still think The Post is approaching in its editorial work a very superior standard. If ever there was call for clear but courageous thinking, it is now. Thousands of citizens in Washington City and throughout the country look to The Post to point the way.

Statistician's Reassurance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

On July 11 a temporary stenographer was quite worried over the fact that she might lose her job and be replaced by Civil Service people who qualified in the recent examination.

Please reassure her. Last September I took the statistical examination. At the Civil Service Commission I was informed that only 5,400 out of 41,000 (about 13 per cent) in the whole country qualified. I was told it was the stiffest examination ever given by the commission.

I am about half-way down the list. Last week I again visited Civil Service. I am still in the same place I was six months ago when I received my rating. They told me practically no permanent appointments had been made.

When I passed, I was all buoyed up. With all the temporaries employed in the General Accounting Office, Internal Revenue, Treasury and other permanent bureaus, I supposed the 5,400 experts (they had to be expert to pass that examination) would be immediately absorbed.

But 200 were blanketed in General Accounting just before ratings were released. I have been told nearly all temporaries in Washington took the examination and failed. And now, with the new civil service ruling, it will be possible to put under civil service thousands of incompetent clerks who will be required to take only a non-competitive cursory examination. Not 5 in 100 could hope to pass the last statistical examination.

I have wondered how much it costs to put through an examination to 41,000 people. How much useless money has been spent by the applicants for instruction courses, notary fees, etc.! What, after all, was the purpose of the statistical examination? Thousands of political statistical appointments have been made since last September—but the cream of the country's junior statistical clerks have not been called.

So, little stenographer, take heart! It doesn't matter if only 25 percent will pass, as you state, or 100 percent. The list will still be there when the people's money gives another examination. And in your job you are quite secure—if you have a vote!

A STATISTICIAN ON THE WAITING LIST.

Unionists And Economics.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

To develop further a train of argument initiated in a recent communication of mine to The Post, I would cite the recent abortive strike of automotive repairmen in the District of Columbia.

Your news columns referred from time to time to the financial contributions of various local unions toward the support of these poorly paid workers, which, of course, displayed admirable unity and co-operation on the part of labor. But obviously it is faulty economics to contribute to a movement which, if successful, can only result in increased costs to the contributor.

If what is called a living wage were gained by the repairmen, there would be a corresponding reduction in the living wage of the motorist forced to seek their services. And incidentally he might be a fellow trades-unionist.

That organized labor is responsible for many betterments in working conditions, etc., does not admit of argument, but in the field of real wages its claims are farcical. Its psychology is one of escape, delay and postponement—a sort of hit-and-run complex—and the honest objective observer sees only a vicious circle of increased costs and increased wages.

Will the trades-unionist ever learn that economic law is as immutable as the tides? And that he has been playing the role of Canute? Will he ever learn and state what are his real objectives? Will he continue to cheer labor leaders who negotiate settlements that are more apparent than real as marks of progress? In short, will he apply his God-given but dormant intelligence to his problems?

Reflections On The 12-Hour Day.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I have read with interest your editorial in today's issue of The Post titled "The Twelve-Hour Day," and wish to comment on the subject briefly since it fits my personal situation.

I wish to say at the beginning that I am employed by a large chain store company in the capacity of manager of one of its stores and, like my job very much in addition to the comfortable salary afforded my family and myself. But aside from all of that, I feel that 12 hours or more a day of work is an injustice inasmuch as there is no time left to enjoy the fruits of one's labor.

The condition of long hours prevails in all the chain stores in this territory as well as the independent groceries, and I believe the fact has been overlooked to some extent after all that has been said and done in this respect.

My company has been generous in its treatment of its employes insofar as salaries are concerned, but I believe someone should call its attention to the fact that managers and store clerks are also human beings and deserve a little more time for recreation.

In addition to long hours in this section another condition exists which is very unfair in my opinion. We close our stores at 1 p. m. every Wednesday, which is all right in some respects, but any employe who is entitled to a week's vacation with pay is deprived of same and an employe receiving two weeks' vacation is automatically reduced to one week as a penalty for closing the stores five and one-half hours per week for two and one-half months. This Wednesday afternoon closing is a local agreement and is compulsory although the employes have no choice in the matter whatsoever, as it is sponsored by the independent merchants of all classes and agreed to by the chain officials.

In closing I would like to emphasize the fact that I have no grievance against my company at all as I am at liberty to sever my connection at any time, and am merely writing this to show that 12-hour days do exist in other places, too.

The Post Impressionist

Entertainment: Mass Production.

Post Office, Friday.

ON THE 12th of July, this year, admirers of Desiderius Erasmus commemorated the 400th anniversary of his death—shutting their eyes, as we mildly reminded them, to the little differences between the Old Style Calendar and the New. Today, E. Phillips Oppenheim, whose hundredth book appeared away back in 1927, himself celebrates his second centennial: he publishes (which is to say that his publishers publish) his hundredth full-length novel.

In fact, this is a year of important anniversaries for him: He'll be 70 in October—he's been writing for exactly half a century.

His output now totals 137 volumes . . .

Don't cast the elder Dumas in our columnar face! The elder Dumas was a syndicate, though a king. E. P. is at least a dictator: scorning ghost-writers, he dictates every morning and late afternoon.

What if Dumas rewrote much that his staff turned out? Oppenheim revises everything that his stenographer has typed from his dictation.

What if the books of Dumas & Co. were better books? Dumas & Co.—if you include all that's attributed to them—did write more volumes than Oppenheim, but they achieved only some 5,900,000 words therein. Oppenheim, single-voiced, is still going strong—beyond the 10,050,000 mark. And these are days when what counts is quantity production!

Listen to Oppenheim's American publishers—Little, Brown & Co.:

"One hundred novels, 33 collections of short stories and one travel book! A mathematical computation shows that each of the novels and short-story collections averages about 75,000 words. Multiply this figure by 133 and you get a total of 9,975,000 words—which doesn't allow for some stories that have appeared in magazines without being included in any of the books. Add an approximate 50,000 for 'The Quest for Winter Sunshine' (the travel book) and you have 10,050,000 words."

After that—the publishers seem to ask—what is left of Dumas on the modern Field of the Literary Cloth of Gold?

Well, not much, we have to admit—not mich, except that Dumas sheds a larger cubic footage of gore. His casualty list is substantially longer.

And, even there, Oppenheim enters a strong claim to more than mere honorable mention in a special class. To get Dumas' deaths up to the record sum claimed for him, you have to take into account certain scrimmage scenes, simple mass murders, where the people slaughtered are not, strictly speaking, characters at all . . . Well, by the time thorough Oppenheim got halfway through his first novel—which he ruthlessly entitled "Expiation"—he had killed off every one of its original dramatis personae: "he had to invent a whole new set, in order to continue the story."

This columnist's own feeling is that Oppenheim's best period was that pre-war period when he was fictionally sending German secret agents to Paris, where they employed lovely ladies to hook brave, but susceptible, English diplomats, who saved their lives and honor, and their country's blue-prints, only through the fact that the ladies' unforeseen love for these young heroes suddenly overcame the lure of Teuton Gelt. Perhaps our enthusiasm sprang from what was then the novelty of such novels. Perhaps we liked them because we too were young and susceptible—if not brave. But we may tell you this much to assure you of Mr. O's authenticity:

In that bright period we knew somebody who said she was a source of some of Oppenheim's spy-information—and, when next we heard of her, which was in the winter of 1917-18, she was about to be put on trial as a spy.

Those were the days! They were, in fact, the Oppenheim-days that made us mention Erasmus.

We don't intend any close comparison between Erasmus and Oppenheim. Such a comparison might be odious to the admirers of either the one or the other—and we happen to be, within limits, an admirer of both.

There are phases of Erasmus which strike us as unnecessarily brutal, and phases which strike us as uncommonly shifty. There are phases of Oppenheim's work which strike us as vindictive (for a purely personal reason) and phases (late phases) which strike us as mechanical.

But we have already gone on record, in this column, as a member of Dr. Lester Born's international chorus, acclaiming Erasmus as a great humanist, because he helped to carry the torch of Greek learning and Byzantine culture into the benighted west.

And, because E. Phillips Oppenheim has beguiled and entertained millions of readers with his millions of words—these latest 75,000 of which ("The Magnificent Hoax") are said to be written in his highest mood—we venture to call Oppenheim, in his degree, a bit of a humanist, also!

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Extra Olympians.

They had to resort to the old reliable fear psychology to redeem their own shiftlessness, but the American Olympic committee at last came up with sufficient money to send abroad the largest American team of all.

The trouble was due to several causes, including, of course, the introduction by the Nazis of politics and religion into a sporting event, and inflation of the program. The international Olympic committee made the original mistake. The committee should have taken the games away from Germany as soon as it became obvious that the Nazis had no understanding of the meaning of sport or the purpose of the Olympics. But the international committee is a sort of Sporting League of Nations, and the boys compromised thei r ideals to avoid one row—a course which inevitably caused another.

* * * *

Neither Germany nor Italy is fit to run an Olympic show nowadays, for sport in both countries is definitely intended to fatten athletes for slaughter in war. Consequently, their athletes, steamed up by their hysterical press, make sport in a warlike spirit against enemies not sporting opponents.

The Italians, in particular, under Mussolini, are poor losers. They sent an amateur boxing team to New York a few years ago and kicked up a petulant riot in Madison Square Garden when some little American kid slapped the ears off their flyweight, Edelweiss Rodriguez, and received an earned decision from the judges. Rodriguez, flopped on the canvas at the verdict, kicking and squalling like a brat, and his trainer waved his arms to the galleries, inciting a shower of debris, including two open knives.

It should be a pleasure to lick them in sports because they are so childish in their tantrums.

It is hard to believe, but their papers once threatened to block a League of Nations loan to the Austrian government because an Austrian soccer team had had the effrontery to fetch the Italian team a swift kick in the pants in a big international game. This isn't sport in the Olympic meaning of the word, and the games should have been suspended this year, as they were during the war, to let the warring athletes cool out and study the ethics of civilized sportsmen.

* * * *

The Nazis face a delicate problem in the track and field events, where the Hitler youth doubtless will be defeated numerous times by a group of American Negro boys.

When Max Schmeling came over to fight Joe Louis, Hitler, Goebbels and the rest disowned him and his undertaking until he had won. It was then discovered that he had been fighting for Hitler and the Nazi philosophy, after all, and had proved the racial supremacy of the Hitler youth. It was explained, too, that a Hitler youth naturally could not be beaten by a Negro. Perhaps after the Negro Olympians of the American team have beaten the Hitler youth in the sprints and jumps the Hitler youth will turn out to be Communists at heart.

Just as a friendly suggestion to an embarrassed wonder man, however, Hitler might consider the words of the Southern coach whose runners spent a whole afternoon trailing colored runners at a big meet in Franklin Field some years ago and said that night over a soothing crock of hootch that it sho did look like down home to see his white boys chasing those colored boys out there.

* * * *

The American squad could have been reduced by about 70 members without injustice, for almost a third of the members are mere boondogglers. The team includes 21 baseball players, whose performance will be just a demonstration, not an Olympic competition; a field handball team of 15 members, 10 weightlifters, 10 canoeists, or canoers, and a field hockey team of 15.

Baseball is not an international game, and even in its native land is so highly professionalized that the amateurs are not even consulted on amendments to the rules or the composition of the standard field. Field handball is a native Nazi sport almost unknown in this country except to a small hyphented group, and weight-lifting is not a sport, but a peculiarity. There is a time and place for everything, including courtship, and canoeing distinctly calls for a girl, moonlight, white pants and seclusion.

Notes Of A Tourist

Motor Trip To West Coast Yields Variety Of Wayside Comment, Indicating Nation Is Impatient For Recovery.

By Merlo J. Pusey.

JAUNTING across the country in temperatures ranging up to 120 degrees may not be the most pleasant sort of vacation. But it lends perspective to some of our national problems that can never be attained by hobnobbing with politicians in Washington or delving into library tomes. Having just returned from an automobile trip to the Pacific Coast, I heartily recommend such casual motor cruising to anyone who is inclined to think that the animating spirit of America springs from this politically minded city.

I make no pretense of bringing the last word from the sticks as to either politics or economic conditions. I kept away from politicians, chambers of commerce and other routine sources of information. Nor did I enter into competition with "America Speaks" in polling samples of the rank and file. But I did keep my eyes and ears open on a trip of nearly 7,000 miles. To generalize from such observations would be hazardous. Yet some impressions from this panoramic view may not be lightly dismissed.

One of the first things I noted is that people living in small towns scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific are far less interested in the November election than are Washingtonians. I asked a pleasant young fellow who sold me gasoline in Lordsburg, N. Mex., how that section of the Southwest will vote. "Let's see," came the response, "who's going to run for President this year?"

At Gila Bend, Ariz., I made similar inquiries. Each time the reply was a shrug of the shoulders or an indifferent "I dunno." But when the conversation turned to gila monsters, the 117-degree temperature or the wild horses of that region the residents of this desert town were positively garrulous. My experience was similar in various other sections of the Southwest. For the residents of the great open spaces events in Washington seem to hold little more interest than happenings in Paris or Moscow.

Interest In National Scene Centers In Cities.

INTEREST in national problems seems to be more general in the populous areas. But seldom did I find among the rank and file of voters with whom I talked any tendency to analyze the issues created by the New Deal. From Virginia to California I listened to numerous indorsements of the Administration. Almost invariably I asked why so many crosses will be placed under the emblematic rooster in November. The replies may be divided into categories. First, the people of the South feel obligated to the New Deal because of the money it has spent on favorite projects. Second, they are traditionally Democratic.

In Tennesssee the TVA is a dominating factor. A service station attendant in Knoxville told me that city is enjoying a boom because of the construction activities and cheap power made possible by the TVA. An enthusiastic soda squirt in a little central Tennessee town assured me that folks thereabouts would vote 100 to 1 for Roosevelt because of the TVA.

Across the Mississippi in Arkansas the WPA seems to be an important factor. Several informants contended that it will influence numerous votes among relief families, but a garage owner complained bitterly that he could no longer hire a man who would do an honest day's work. WPA has taught men to loaf on the job, he said, and it is almost impossible to break that habit even though better wages are offered for private work.

Casual inquiries at Fort Worth and various lesser towns in Texas indicated that many people in the Lone Star State are pleased with the "benefits" granted by the New Deal, although some of my informants had begun to wonder if all is well along the Potomac. Incidentally, Dallas was so absorbed with its Centennial Exposition that politics seemed entirely out of place. In the little wind-swept town of Sierra Blanca I was assured that the President will win because he "has done so much for the common man." El Paso, a mechanic informed me, takes a second Roosevelt term for granted, on the assumption that everyone who has been financially aided by the New Deal will vote Democratic.

Little Concern Felt For National Debt.

I HEARD so much about New Deal "benefits" in the South that I began to raise the question of the national debt. Was it possible that no one of the many voters rejoicing over the spending of money had any concern over the enormous deficits that have been incurred? The typical reply came from a suntanned gasoline vendor in Phoenix. "No," he said, "the people hereabouts don't give a damn about the debt, because they won't have to pay it." Substantially the same unthinking masses welcome Government spending of any type so long as it promises temporary stimulation. Always the implication seemed to be that the debt concerns only the industrial barons of the East.

By the time I reached Salt Lake City on the return trip from San Diego and Los Angeles the preponderance of New Deal sentiment among the people I had questioned was indeed impressive. The outlook for Gov. Landon appeared very gloomy, even though most of the territory I had covered was in the South. In the Utah capital, however, I met a friend from Washington who had taken a jaunt similar to, and yet very different from, mine. He had traveled by train, rather than by automobile; his conversations had been largely with business and professional men, and his route had been across the northern half of the country. He was convinced that Mr. Roosevelt will be defeated because of what he termed the united opposition of business and the awakening of substantial middle-class elements.

When I later covered much the same territory on my return trip, I found no opposing unanimity among the working class. An outspoken young fellow at Rock Springs, Wyo., told me (his exact language is unfortunately unprintable) that people in that vicinity are sick of New Deal hokum. But Laramie seemed to be well pleased with the projects initiated by the New Deal there. Various other stops in Wyoming suggested that opinion in that State is very much divided.

Midwesterner Impressed With Record Of Landon.

IN KIMBALL, NEBR., a service station attendant informed me that Landon is popular because of his record in the neighboring State of Kansas. At North Platte a mention of the Presidential contest brought complaints about the AAA's crop reduction program. A Kearney resident told me some farmers had been ruined by the AAA, and that labor there is opposing the New Deal because the NRA reduced wages. In Omaha, however, I heard the NRA praised because of its improvement of working conditions. Interspersed between these conflicting opinions were various expressions of candid indecision as to how Presidential votes should be cast.

Similar uncertain replies continued through Iowa and Illinois, but in Chicago a young college professor was convinced that the local machine would deliver the city into the Democratic column. In Indiana as well as in various other States I found more interest in local sales taxes than in national politics. A large number of States have been driven by necessity to raise revenue by this means, much to the annoyance of the man in the street.

I heard stories favorable and unfavorable to the Administration in Ohio. The talk in Pennsylvania was mostly Republican. Of course, these replies may or may not be typical. My chief impression was, in listening to many casual opinions from folks who ordinarily express themselves solely through the ballot box, that returns in the Middle West may be greatly influenced by the campaigns yet to be made.

Scant Excitement Found In Approaching Election.

MORE IMPORTANT than any repies to my queries, however, was the general attitude of the working men and women with whom I talked. Nowhere was there any excitement over the election. Everyone, it seems to me, was more interested in the work he was doing than in politics. I suppose one has to seek out the malcontents to hear talk of revolution. I did no such seeking. I merely chatted with people I met in the ordinary course of a motor tour. Yet if anyone tries to impress me with the danger of subversive elements in America while this jaunt is green in memory I shall be inclined to laugh in his face.

In fact, it is difficult to realize that the country has been immersed in depression after one has glided over excellent highways, through flourishing fields, seemingly contented towns and busy cities for thousands of miles. Deplorable conditions are sometimes revealed, particularly in the tenant farming districts of the South. But they certainly are not the dominant note. Maybe depression is a state of mind. At least, I thought so for a moment when a ragged tramp trudging across the top of Boulder Dam smiled gleefully and descanted upon the greatness of President Roosevelt because "he has given the people elevators (which operate between the upper and lower sections of the dam) and ice water."

On many occasions I saw manifestations of the spirit which, it seems to me, has made the United States a great and prosperous Nation. It may be found in the Texas Centennial Exposition, in that immense engineering project which will back up the waters of the Colorado River for nearly 100 miles in the arid Southwest, in the exquisite setting of the California Pacific International Exposition at San Diego, in the seemingly endless streams of modern automobiles that travels the highways, in the satisfactory rather than spectacular advancement of many young men and women who have not been discouraged by hard times, and even to some extent perhaps, in the cotton field near Greenville, Tex., which has been attractively surrounded by a beautiful border of flowers.

If my observations are worth anything, the mass energy thus exemplified is not likely to be changed very much either by the depression or the New Deal. Ours is an immense country with unlimited recuperative powers if it has the right leadership. And, the temperament and traditions of the country being what they are, the people are likely to sweep aside any administration which does not measure up to expectation with the same ease that a Kansas cow flicks a mosquito off her back.

Three Powers' Locarno Talk Reported Set

France Pledges Armed Aid to Britain, Belgium, Officials Hear.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, July 16.—Authoritative circles tonight reported a Locarno conference between France, Great Britain and Belgium at Brussels July 22 virtually was assured as the result of a Franco-British compromise.

France, it was said, agreed to confine the conference to a simple "exchange of views," excluding any decisions concerning the Locarno problem itself.

The French government also was reported to have promised not to ask for enforcement of the accord of last March 19, pledging virtual armed assistance by Britain to France and Belgium in the case of a crisis.

This followed reports Germany may soon make a gesture of conciliation.

Great Britain, officials asserted, has agreed to attend a three-power meeting, provided it is limited to preparations for a second, real, Locarno conference which would include Germany and Italy from the outset.

Both the French and British governments have agreed, official sources said, that it is necessary for them to meet with Belgium to examine European problems in the light of the new Austro-German accord, and the new co-operation between Germany and Italy.

The meeting at Brussels, these sources said, would be limited to:

1. A general examination of the whole European situation.
2. Preparation for a later conference, either one including Italy and Germany or a large meeting taking in other continental powers.

In return for the reported British agreement of attendance at the preliminary talks, France agreed to postpone her demand for promulgation of the March 19 accord providing for virtual Franco-British-Belgian military alliances until either Germany's answer to the British questionnaire is received or a conference which includes Germany definitely breaks down.

Official sources said France had heard reports that Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler was drafting an answer to the British Locarno questionnaire for quick dispatch to London.

Germany's failure to answer the questionnaire of May 6, regarding her "intentions" in the Rhineland and elsewhere in Europe, has been the chief basis for French insistance that the Nazi state be barred from preliminary Locarno conferences between Britain, France and Belgium.

Bisschop Gets Consul Post for Netherlands

Laurenas Bisschop, manager of the Holland-American Line in Baltimore, Md., has been appointed consul of the Netherlands for Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware, it was learned here last night.

The new consul came to Baltimore about seven months ago, having been in San Francisco and Los Angeles for the past six years.

Federal Group Asks Currency With Gold Basis

Report, Against New Deal Policy, Is Shelved by Advisory Council.

By the Associated Press.

Establishment of a currency convertible into gold, but with the dollar's gold content subject to change, has been recommended by a subcommittee of the Commerce Department's business advisory council.

This group, appointed six months ago to make a thorough study of monetary policy, it was learned authoritatively yesterday, submitted its findings, sharply conflicting with some New Deal ideas, at the last meeting of the council. Its report was referred to the council's executive committee which, in turn, pigeon-holed it in a second subcommittee.

At the headquarters of the council, officials, in answer to questions, would say nothing more than that a sub-committee report on monetary questions had been received and so referred. They declined to reveal the personnel of the committees in question.

Opposed by New Deal.

A currency convertible into gold is opposed by the New Deal. Its key piece of monetary legislation, the gold reserve act of 1934, made it illegal for gold to circulate as currency, pre-empted for the Government title to all gold in the country and ordered all gold coin melted into bars.

A dollar with an adjustable gold content was seen as fitting more readily into the New Deal monetary scheme. It recalled the commodity dollar idea which was widely discussed in the fall of 1933, just prior to the crystallization of Administration policy on money.

This proposal was based upon the theory that the price level could be influenced upward or downward by, respectively, decreasing or increasing the legal gold equivalent of the dollar. Proponents of such a program proposed that the prices be pushed to a satisfactory level and maintained there by such methods.

By authority of the gold reserve act, President Roosevelt reduced the gold content of the dollar to 69.05 per cent of its former quantity. He retains the authority to clip the gold dollar to 50 per cent of the quantity of metal which it contained prior to the first cut.

Authority Transfer Urged.

In this connection, a major statement on money in the Republican platform urged that this authority be taken away from the Chief Executive and restored to Congress.

The Republican platform also urged the maintenance of a "sound currency" at "any hazard." Gov. Landon of Kansas, the party's Presidential nominee, sent a telegram to the convention saying that as a matter of definition, he regarded a "sound currency" as one convertible into gold.

The Democratic platform adopted three weeks ago at Philadelphia called for a permanently sound currency. It made no mention of gold or silver.

Candidates Free From Bias

"The outlook at present is not for an overwhelming majority for either candidate."

"As the campaign progresses, that outlook may change," he said. "Students of form would note Gov. Landon's record for making progress during a campaign. His pre-convention progress was amazing. Having served under Presidents Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and two months under President Roosevelt, naturally I am particularly interested in Presidents and possible Presidents. Gov. Landon, of course, is a possible President."

Meyer expressed the opinion Landon "would conduct the highest type of campaign—I'm sure it won't be a dirty campaign so far as Landon is concerned."

Meyer said he didn't discuss Government financing and that he had no special object in his visit except to pay his respects.

"I stopped on my way to California to pay my respects, and when I say my respects, that is what I mean," he said.

Works on Speech.

"We had a nice visit," said Gov. Landon, "a nice visit."

The Governor worked on the final draft of his acceptance speech at intervals during a day crowded with visitors, including a group of war veterans whom he greeted on the east steps of the capitol under a broiling sun, which sent the mercury to 109 degrees.

As a red-coated band played "Oh, Susannah," Landon welcomed a group which had motored from the eighteenth annual reunion of the Rainbow Division at Kansas City, Mo., to evidence their support.

"You symbolize the national unity and the national service mobilized in a great cause," Landon told the cheering group. "I am glad to welcome you to Kansas and I am grateful for your support."

C. K. Gregg, Indianapolis, leader of the group, said there were 50 veterans in the 12-car caravan.

As the local band lined up three-deep on the east step, the shirt-sleeved veterans formed an inner lane and stood at salute as Landon and Nelson walked slowly down.

Governor Cheered.

The Governor wore a white suit and stiff straw hat which he waved as the visitors cheered. As those in charge of arrangements delayed the Governor's talk somewhat, a veteran shouted:

"Those fellows must have been in our outfit."

"You must have been in the doghouse," Landon called back.

"It was the guard house then," came the reply as the crowd laughed.

When Gregg invited the Kansas Governor to join the group in Kansas City for a banquet, Landon replied:

"I wish I could come down to eat some high-toned rations with you."

Supports Landon.

Springfield, Mass., July 16 (AP).—Joseph B. Ely, former Governor of Massachusetts and one of five prominent Democrats, who jointly opposed President Roosevelt's renomination, threw his support today to Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, and hinted he might do some campaign speaking.

Ely talked politics over the breakfast table with John D. M. Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee.

"I have a bad habit of talking too much," Ely said. "It is probable I will talk too much in this campaign."

Joseph McGrath, chairman of the Democratic State Committee, dismissed the announcement with the brief statement that it was not "news."

"It is nothing but a repetition of a pledge made by a group of American Liberty Leaguers at the du Pont dinner in Washington some weeks ago," McGrath said.

"I am going to follow the Democratic ideals of government," was Ely's explanation of his announcement.

"I might phrase a better definition and say that I'm going to follow what I've always considered the ideals of the Democratic Party as I see them," he declared. "It happens that in the course of the coming election those ideals are espoused by the Republican Party in national politics."

He did not say what his stand would be in State politics, but indicated he would have a statement later.

"The Rooseveltian party has forsaken the principles of the Democratic Party," the former Governor said.

Harbord, Willis Praise Radio As Means to Disseminate Truth

Broadcasting Officials Joined by Waltman in Urging That Mass Communication Media Remain Unshackled; Institute Hears Politics.

Charlottesville, Va., July 16 (AP).—Antennae reaching out over America from untaxed radio receivers to catch from the air a variety of programs, all free, are symbols of a new democracy of opportunity in mass information, education and culture, said Gen. James G. Harbord, chairman of the board of the Radio Corporation of America, today.

Frederic A. Willis, assistant to the president of the Columbia Broadcasting Co., and Franklyn Waltman, of The Washington Post, also participated in a triangular discussion on the responsibility of mass communication media in a democracy at an open forum of the Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia.

While means of mass communication remain unshackled, as in America, it will be, Gen. Harbord said, "the very cornerstone of democracy, a bulwark against the tyranny that thrives on the suppression of truth.

"Untrammeled books, an untrammeled press, and an untrammeled radio are more fundamentally important than votes," he continued. "Before a vote is worthy of the name the voter must have the opportunity of obtaining information. Men had votes in ancient Rome, but the republic failed. It failed because, among other reasons, it had no mass communication."

Development Is Traced.

Gen. Harbord traced the development of electrical communication since the invention of the telegraph, and told how the Radio Corporation of America is carrying on experiments in television and in use of ultrashort wave radio.

Radio's responsibility in a present-day democracy is great, began Mr. Willis. "The responsibility for broadcasting in our democracy is really the responsibility of good American citizenship.

"This includes a duty to encourage free speech, free communication, free interplay of thought (remembering that only in this way can democracy be perpetuated). It includes a duty to give fair play not alone to majorities, but to responsible minorities. * * * To suppress them would destroy our democracy. It includes a duty to see America as a unity, as well as a land of parts—remembering that the welfare of the whole is vital, if the interests of each part are to be served."

Waltman, political analyist for his newspaper, said "the greatest service rendered in recent years was the part the American press played, almost single-handedly, in the early part of the New Deal in keeping alive a spirit of discussion.

"So badly defeated were the Republicans and so demoralized and dispirited that they abandoned the responsibility which rests on the minority party that every battle on early issues went to the New Deal by default.

"It was the press of the country, both Democratic and Republican, which called a halt on inexcusable haste and indifference with which measures of far-reaching effect were being adopted by Congress on recommendation of the Executive. Slowly the press of this country forced both the Administration and Congress to give heed to deliberative processes so necessary in democracy. It is possible in those days we had come close to the brink of dictatorship in this land. If true, credit for turning back such forces belongs almost exclusively to the American press."

John Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General, presented the Administration's case to the institute's round-table debate on platforms of the political parties and charged that the Republican program "is obviously shot through with inconsistencies."

Herman Langworthy, chairman of the platform committee of the recent Republican National Convention, spoke in behalf of the Republican Party yesterday.

The political round table will be climaxed tomorrow night when Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, and Hiram Bingham, former Senator from Connecticut, speak on "Representative Government Versus Dictatorship."

Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President, and Earl Browder, nominee of the Communist Party, will also speak. The third-party movement will be discussed Saturday morning.

"The emotional appeal to fear" was termed by Dickinson as the "one great argument, and one only" the Republicans have.

"The whole sense of our opponents' case * * * falls back in the last analysis on their arguments from abstractions.

"Their case depends upon turning away from the record, turning away from their own promises and professions and retreating to charges of fascism, communism and regimentation," Dickinson said.

The American people are facing a test, he said, whether "having embarked upon the most magnificent enterprise of recovery and progress that any people has ever undertaken, and having carried it forward under the processes of democratic government with superb and unprecedented success, they will permit themselves when near the summit of their goal to be intimidated by hollow cries and vain shibboleths into the fatal error of faltering, feinting and falling back."

Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, Democratic junior National Committeewoman from Michigan, joined with Dickinson in lauding the Democratic platform.

The platform, she said, "recognizes that the Government obligation to the people extends to youth and old age, to the family, the home and wage earner, to the agriculturist and the work in industry, to the farm owner and to the home owner."

"Because this is true, and because the platform advocates principles and objectives for which women have worked over many years it will draw to the Roosevelt standard the support of women the country over.

She said that women now looked to government as a means through which measures for social benefit and world peace can be realized.

Garrard Glenn, author, editor and professor of law in the University of Virginia, spoke today on early and late Anglo-American censorship, and he defined censorship as "our ancestors understood it, and as many of our fellow citizens would like to practice it, as the effort to make people agree against their wills."

Prof. Glenn traced the development of censorship through English and American history, he pointed out that the period of censorship has passed in many respects, but warned that "it should be remembered that periods of excess always leave a scar.

"The Volstead law has gone, but some of the Supreme Court's decisions as to the liberty of the individual will remain to plague us."

Propaganda, if properly handled, was called a blessing by Edward L. Bernays, public relations counsel of New York, and Dr. Harold D. Lasswell, professor of political science at the University of Virginia.

Addressing the round table of public affairs, Dr. Lasswell declared that propaganda can shield democracy as well as it can smash it. Bernays termed propaganda the "voice of the people in a democracy."

Discuss Japanese Problems.

Dr. Elizabeth Boody, of the Bureau of International Research, in Howard University, and Dr. Ben Dorfman, member of the U. S. Tariff Commission, discussed Japanese problems at the round table on Changing Asia.

Dr. Boody said the financial situation of the Japanese government was giving citizens of that country some concern "because large expenditures for the army and navy in Manchuria and North China, are met by private borrowing."

Broker's Wife Is Found Guilty; To Die in Chair

Mrs. Bolton Is Convicted of Slaying Husband in His Office.

murder in Cook County," Prosecutor Crowley said, "send her to her just desserts, send her to the electric chair.

"If you have courage, gentlemen, send this woman who has perjured and murdered to the electric chair. Men have gone to the chair for their brutal crimes—why not this women?"

The henna-haired widow's defense recited that her husband, Joseph W. Bolton, jr., an insurance broker, had caused her grief by 14 years of philandering.

Bolton was shot down in his Loop offices June 15 during a quarrel with his wife, which the State charged was only one of a long series of arguments with which she had harrassed him.

Admits Buying Pistol.

Although she maintained after her arrest that she had not fired the fatal shots, Mrs. Bolton caused a flurry in the courtroom yesterday by admitting she bought the pistol in Hammond, Ind., and went to Bolton's offices, where she shot him dead.

She testified she had intended to commit suicide in her husband's presence to "embarrass" him, but changed her mind and shot him when he called her a "degrading name."

Public Defender Benjamin Bachrach, pleading with the jurors to "be merciful to this wretched woman," also touched on the testimony that she had remarked husband killers were never convicted in Chicago courts.

"For some reason or other," he commented, "the State's attorney would like this case to be a turning point in a succession of cases in which women have not received the extreme penalty for murder."

First Woman to Get Chair.

Mrs. Bolton was the first woman to be given the extreme penalty since electrocution replaced hanging in capital cases in Cook County.

Although Judge Robert C. O'Connell warned spectators against a demonstration when the verdict was returned, a wave of whispering spread through the audience, predominantly women, when Foreman Frank Haidle read the jury's decision.

The court set July 23 for hearing a motion for a new trial.

Immediately after her arrest in her husband's office, Mrs. Bolton told detectives Bolton shot himself. That night she amended her story, saying he was shot as they struggled for the gun.

Fired Six Shots.

Her admissions that she fired the six shots which pierced his body came after the State called Bolton's secretary, Miss Andrea Houyoux, as a surprise witness.

The secretary testified she pecked through a door, heard the argument and saw Bolton killed.

Testimony brought out the argument concerned Mrs. Marie Harned, of Gardner, Ill., with whom Mrs. Bolton accused her husband of undue friendliness. Mrs. Harned said she knew Bolton casually as a friend of her son.

A native of Baltimore and a graduate of Goucher College, Mrs. Bolton met Bolton while she was working for a Baltimore newspaper and married him in Bessemer, Ala., in 1922. For seven years they lived in Birmingham, Ala.

Roosevelt Indorses Mrs. Owen's Nuptials

Mutual Liking Results From Meeting With Capt. Boerge Rohde, Interview Reveals; Officer to Work for Democratic Cause.

President Roosevelt heartily approves of the marriage of the United States Minister to Denmark and Capt. Boerge Rohde, and the bridegroom also likes the President, it was revealed in an interview with the couple at the Democratic National Headquarters in New York, announced yesterday.

While the bride is making campaign speeches for President Roosevelt, her husband plans to be in the audience and will lend his efforts to further the Democratic cause. He met the President at the supper party given at Hyde Park after the wedding. The Minister may have a two months' extension of her leave of absence, it is said, for the campaign.

Meanwhile, Capt. Rohde and his bride will make an extended trip through the national parks of the Northwest to the Pacific Coast.

Although no definite announcements have been made concerning Mrs. Owen's speeches, she conferred in New York recently with Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Mary Dewson, chairman of the women's division of the Democratic National Committee.

Mrs. Owen and the bridegroom returned for this conference from a wedding trip to Niagara Falls, which, according to the captain, are "wonderful." In fact, the captain is enthusiastic about everything he has seen so far in America.

Shortly after the conference at Democratic headquarters, Mrs. Owen and Capt. Rohde left for Sands Point, Long Island, in the yacht, Now Listen, belonging to her son-in-law, Mr. Robert Lehman.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

When Husband Beats Wife, and Wife Puts Up With Abuse, What Can Anxious Family Friend Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: This problem, although not a personal one, is very near my heart, and I would be most grateful for an early answer. Five years ago my husband, through business contacts, met a very charming young Southern couple. He became so interested in them that he immediately invited them into our home. We both became thoroughly fond of them, I especially of the young wife, who was gracious, pretty and a perfect lady in every respect.

* * * *

As time went on, my husband and I had to go on a trip, and as we could not invite both of them to go, I decided it would be best to ask the wife, as she could room with our daughter. During the trip the young husband came up for one of the dances, and as the evening was drawing to a close I found him quarreling with his wife. She was greatly upset, I could see, but with her Southern pride she did a swell job of hiding her embarrassment. We tried to forget the incident, realizing that all couples have their differences.

* * * *

In the last few years I have been with this couple a great deal and naturally found out that things are not as they should be. The little wife has worked for ten years, helping as much as he. He embarrasses her with his nagging, accusations and vile temper, anytime, anywhere. I am a woman much older than she, but I have every reason to know this girl is genuine, comes from splendid people, and is straight as can be.

* * * *

Not long ago my husband called this couple to ask them to spend the evening at our club. They readily accepted and during the evening the husband's conduct made all of us ill at ease. Finally he left our party. We carried the wife to her home and as soon as we departed he attacked her, tearing her lovely dress to pieces, blackening both her eyes and bruising her body shockingly.

* * * *

My husband and I would like to help this little girl but she refuses to accept our help, because she says it may do harm to my husband, as he is in the public eye and a business man. Her family has had a great deal of illness of late, and if she were to leave her husband she would have herself and a child to support. Isn't it too bad there isn't a whipping post here in the District for husbands who need it so badly? Any advice you can offer will be gratefully appreciated. Sincerely.

MRS. X.

Interference Inadvisable.

DEAR MRS. X.: There is only one piece of advice I have to offer in a case of this kind, and that is for acquaintances and friends to steer clear of interference in the domestic difficulties of husband and wife. If the wife had solicited your help, or my advice, and had given us in reasonable detail her side of the story, we might have some slight justification for attempting to help her straighten out the sorry mess into which you believe her marriage has fallen. But since she has rejected your offer of help, and has—so one gathers—put up with her husband for 10 years, we must assume she is doing so for reasons of her own, the nature of which we cannot guess.

* * * *

The wife has legal redress if she cares to avail herself of it. There is no cause for her to live with a man who subjects her to physical abuse and mental cruelty, unless she prefers living with him to shifting for herself and her child. It is almost inconceivable to me that any modern young woman, who has a foothold in the business world, would permit a child of hers to be brought up in a household where the father was given to fits of ungovernable, unprovoked rage and would submit that child's mother to indignities of the sort you tell about.

* * *

If this young husband is as impossible a person as you believe him to be, surely his wife should have no difficulty in securing separate maintenance for herself and child and legal custody of the latter. In that event, she would not be burdened with the full support of herself and child in case she left him.

M. H.

Woman Seeks Place.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a frankly middle-aged woman, well bred, well educated, of excellent appearance, with a tolerant, active, modern mind, who am seeking—and have for a year now been seeking—a little place for myself in Washington's scheme of things. I have a portfolio stuffed with the best of references, as to my character, background, social and professional abilities, etc., but these things have availed me nothing in finding what I had at first hoped to find: namely, a berth with the Government.

* * * *

Now I have another idea. It has occurred to me I might find a place as companion to a person of my own age or older; one who is interested in psychology and kindred subjects; in music, art, writing (I write myself, by the way), and who would like a sympathetic, intelligent and useful person to be a member of the family; to accompany her on travels, to concerts, to share with her what might otherwise be lonely afternoons, evenings, and so on.

* * * *

I am practically alone in the world and up to now have led a life crammed to the full with activities of a civic, social and professional nature. Surely there must be some door in Washington which will open to me that I may continue to find opportunity for making life pleasant for others and, incidentally, for myself. Can you—or your readers—point me the way? I shall be very deeply appreciattive of any response this letter may net me.

Sincerely yours, . . MRS. B. K.

DEAR MRS. B. K.: It is possible there is someone among my readers who will find in yourself the very person needed to round out a family picture from which one segment is missing. I shall be glad to give your name and address to any who may inquire. If readers have any suggestions to offer which may help you to better find yourself here, those suggestions will be warmly welcomed and promptly forwarded.

H. M.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

And Call It Accident

CHAPTER XXXVI.

RUTH GOT UP, too, and began walking toward the door. She longed to be alone, but Philip followed her. "Remember your promise. Not a word of this awful bit of bad luck till we are all back in London. I am especially anxious that Mr. Singleton shall hear nothing of it—yet."

He nearly added, "I know you had a letter from Singleton yesterday," but he checked the words on his lips. Even Ruth would feel surprised to learn that he scrutinized her mail each morning.

"Of course I won't say anything to Mr. Singleton. I've had a letter from him, but it was only about a girl he thought might be given a small part in our play."

Her lips quivered. That play, with a splendid part for herself, which had still seemed all-important half an hour ago, seemed hardly to matter now.

When she reached her bedroom, she locked the door with a sensation of deep relief. Then she wandered across to one of the high windows. Last night she had almost made up her mind that the stately white house she could just see among the trees should be her future home. Her home, that is, in between an exciting, she had felt sure, successful theatrical career, pursued in London under the happiest conditions.

She had thought of herself, then, as the adored wife of a man who would allow her to have everything exactly her own way—in modern parlance, to lead her own life—while bestowing on her all that the proud title of "marchioness" means in old England. Yet with all that added to her she would be secretly independent, for she would always be a very rich woman, and with all the power she had come to know money confers on its intelligent possessor.

But now everything had changed in her life; and she knew that what had taken place in the last half hour had brought with it far more than the loss of her fortune. It had brought about a complete change in herself.

"Tell me, Ruth, has anything gone wrong with the negotiations concerning the Mayfair theater?"

Lord John had always expected they would go wrong, so little did he trust Philip Trefane's word, or even his business ability to carry through a delicate deal.

"It's nothing to do with the theater; in fact it's fortunate that nothing has yet been really settled about that."

"Then what is the matter? Tell me."

"I had a telephone call from America about an hour ago."

"To say—what?"

"The bank in which I had left practically all my money has gone smash, and as all my business affairs were managed by the president, who abused his trust, I have probably lost everything."

"Good God!" he exclaimed. "Have you nothing left?"

"I have what I transferred to the Mayflower in London before coming here. It was $250,000 and it didn't seem very much to me at the time; so I've spent quite a bit of that money, and almost all of what remains will have to be paid out over the plan I have pledged myself to carry out."

"To whom are you pledged?"

"I am pledged to Philip Trefane."

"Nonsense!" exclaimed John.

"It isn't nonsense. I made certain promises which I must carry out as far as I am able to do so." And then suddenly she remembered her promise of secrecy.

"Look here, John. No one must know for a time what I've just told you. I'm especially anxious that old Mr. Singleton shouldn't hear anything about it till I'm in London. In fact, I beg you to give me your word that what I've just told you shall remain a secret between us."

"Why of course it shall!"

And then it was as if a light broke in on him. "I suppose Philip Trefane asked you to keep this bad news secret for a while?"

"He did; but what made you guess that?"

"It's none of my business, I know, but I do beg you to make no more promises of any kind to either of the Trefanes. It's reasonable that you should pay Philip some compensation for his disappointment, though I doubt if he could compel you to do so."

He waited a moment, and as she said nothing he exclaimed: "Let me put down the money for the production of 'A Daughter of Heth.' You can pay me back later on."

Canned Fruit Juices Make Ideal Frappe

WHAT is frappe, you ask? Originally it meant a whipped mixture with some cream in it, but today it means a partially frozen water ice; in other words, the mixture is frozen to a mush consistency. Usually such frappes are served in sherbet glasses and many times are drunk rather than eaten with a spoon. Customs and taste change and frappes have changed, too.

The canned juices are convenient to use, for all that needs to be done is to open the can, pour the contents into a refrigerator pan and let it freeze. A better consistency and one with the ice particles in small sizes is made by stirring the mixture several times during the freezing period, and you will find that beating it with an eggbeater will make it even throughout. However, to do the beating, transfer the partially frozen ice into a bowl as it is easier to work with.

Such canned fruit juices as pineapple, loganberry, grapefruit, cranberry and cherry are fine alone or in combination with one another. Canned berries such as strawberries, loganberries, blackberries and raspberries make delicious frappes, too. Mash the berries and press through a sieve to make a smooth pulp before freezing.

In addition to the fruit frappes, tomato juice is a popular one to use, and it is especially fine to serve with a meat course or as an appetizer. For a more-pronounced flavor in the tomato frappe, the tomato juice can be combined with a can of tomato sauce. The added seasoning of the sauce gives a pleasing flavor. When ready to serve, this kind of frappe will be attractive if placed in a glass with some sprigs of mint or shredded lettuce in the bottom. The green adds a cooling touch.

The frappes made with the fruit juices are excellent by themselves, or added to cold drinks, and then again they combine well with fruit.

Hot Weather Complicates Baby's Sleep

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

WHEN A BABY frets and cries for no apparent reason, any sensible adult is apt at once to draw the conclusion that he is sleepy. If he is keep from sleeping when he needs the rest, he may be unable to go to sleep when he is put to bed. The need for sleep is like a poison in the system—let it go too far and nervous exhaustion is simply bound to follow.

Daylight saving is a boon to the business man, but it has presented a new problem to many mothers. The children must go to bed in broad daylight if they are to get their full quota of sleep. Many mothers give up the struggle when the time changes. It is hard enough to get the youngsters to bed under ordinary conditions, and the additional handicap saps the mothers' courage.

Often there is the added difficulty of hot weather. It is hard to sleep in a hot, stuffy room, and it seems sheer cruelty to ask the children to come in out of the comparatively cool evening air. Until 9 or even 10 at night during the summer months the streets and yards resound with the shouts of children at play when they should by rights be at rest.

Sleep is as essential to growth and health as are food and air. Sleeping conditions make less difference to a child than to an adult. Of course if a child can find an excuse for staying up, he will use it. He can't sleep in the daytime, he can't sleep in a hot room, the noise out of doors keeps him awake.

The child who knows, however, that his bedtime is fixed no matter what the conditions, and who expects no sympathy and no exceptions, can and will nap in broad daylight even on a hot day.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Well! I knew it would happen. I have just received a very gracious letter from my erstwhile hostess—the one who took me to the lecture on dietetics. She sends her best thanks and concludes: "Of course, I showed your comments to our 'food faddist' as you term her. After reading the articles she came back at me with the statement, 'I see that he has sidestepped beautifully one of the principal points in my talk, namely, that we must not combine carbohydrates and proteins. Almost every one knows that they are absolutely antagonistic to one another.'"

The theory back of the dogma that the stomach secretions are adversely affected by combining carbohydrates and proteins is apparently the well known fact that proteins require a high gastric acidity, while carbohydrates need an alkaline medium for digestion.

In 1934 a distinguished investigator, M. E. Rehfuss, published the results of his observations on 50 patients involving the acid response of the stomach to (1) protein alone, (2) carbohydrates alone and (3) a mixed meal. Using accurate methods he was unable to detect any appreciable difference in the average acid response to these modes of feeding.

Quite recently Shay and others repeated the work of Rehfuss and carried their investigation much further, testing a small group of healthy individuals many times during the course of digestion. More than 6,000 determinations were made, with the positive showing that "carbohydrates and proteins taken together do not in any way interfere with gastric secretions." Furthermore, they assert that carbohydrate assimilation is prolonged and aided by the presence of protein.

No scientific investigator has uncovered the slightest evidence that he who chooses to add roast beef to such starchy foods as potatoes, bread, vegetables and dessert is committing dietary suicide. Neither is he doing anything which is resented by the stomach nor by any part of the digestive apparatus.

Typical Day in Topeka Home A Busy One for Mrs. Landon

Series of "Short Order" Meals, Overseeing of 11-Room House and Care of Two Children Leave Her Little Time to Spare.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., July 16.—The typical day in the life of Mrs. Alf M. Landon, wife of the Republican Presidential nominee, is a busy one. Here is the average day's schedule:

7 a. m.—The family "alarm clock"—Jack, 2, and Nancy Jo, 3—sound off, ready for a new day.

7:30 a. m.—Children's breakfast. Mrs. Landon eats this meal with them.

8-9:30 a. m.—"Short-order breakfast" with John M. Landon, the Governor's father; Mrs. S. E. Cobb, Mrs. Landon's mother; Mrs. Mildred Creighton, secretary; Peggy Anne Landon, 19; and Lacy Haynes, jr., 14, son of a Kansas City friend, putting in an appearance.

9-12—Mrs. Landon plans the day's meals, tends to the dozen and one things necessary to keep an 11-room house running smoothly for her household of eight plus three servants and several watchmen. She and Mrs. Creighton also work on the piled-up correspondence.

Noon—The children's lunch, and 12:30 p. m., family lunch.

1:30 p. m.—"Time out" with the children and Mrs. Cobb taking their naps. Mrs. Landon usually reads on the living room divan and "Grandpa" Landon catches a few winks in his comfortable chair.

5 p. m.—The children's supper, and 6:30 p. m.—family dinner.

7:30 p. m.—It's "a story, please, Mommy," and so with Jack on her lap and Nancy Jo curled up beside her in a big chair in front of the fire, Mrs. Landon complies.

8 p. m.—The children's bedtime with Mrs. Landon helping put them to bed and listening to their prayers.

10:30 p. m.—The lights go out one by one in the well-guarded house.

There have been few telephone calls and visitors are rare and only by appointment.

Advertising Gains Follow Editorial Achievement

POST PROGRESS is becoming a by-word in Washington! Achievement after achievement testifies to the universality of that progress—in editorial excellence, in circulation, in readability, in features.

And in advertising linage, too! Media Records, Inc., writes that, for the first six months of 1936:

"The Washington Post with a gain of 636,303 lines in retail advertising is third in position among morning and Sunday newspapers.

"The New York News is first with a gain of 868,124, and the New York Times is second with a gain of 664,421 lines."

It was inevitable that the news, feature and editorial progress of The Washington Post would evoke a remarkable reader loyalty. This, in turn, has made Post advertising increasingly productive and outstandingly profitable.

One-Man Car Safe, Speedy, Hearing Told

Former Motorman Says Wife Is Stockholder in Trolley Line.

Several Witnesses Are Heard in Opposition to Company.

In the midst of a barrage of criticism against the one-man car, Edward C. Spengman, a Washington motorman, who resigned to become a magazine writer, appeared before the Public Utilities Commission yesterday to put in a kind word for that type of car.

Spengman, a husky, bespectacled individual, worked for the Capital Transit Co., from September 12, 1934, to June 8 last. He said he resigned because of his health and because he wanted to write for the magazines.

He spoke for an hour and a half, praising the one-man car from virtually every standpoint. He said it was safer than the two-man car, just as speedy, and not necessarily injurious to the operator's health.

"When there is no conductor on the car," Spengman said, "the motorman is less likely to go in for day-dreaming. He has no time to think about dates and such."

Asked About Owning Stock.

People's Counsel William A. Roberts, who is opposing the Capital Transit Co.'s request to add 40 more one-man cars to its fleet of 71, asked Spengman if he owned any stock in the company. Spengman said he did not. Roberts recalled that he had seen the name Spengman in the list of stockholders.

Spengman then admitted that his family owned stock in the company. Later, after the hearing, he said the stock was in the name of his wife.

Before Spengman took the stand as a "voluntary witness," there had been a parade of witnesses opposed to further installation of one-man cars here.

William W. Keeler, chairman of the utilities committee of the Central Labor Union, told the P. U. C. that more one-man cars will mean the application of the "stretch-out" system. He also expressed doubt that the savings involved would help the company in its present financial dilemma.

Saving Would Be Small.

"At the best" he said, "the saving in pay roll will mean no more than $72,000 a year. How can you wipe out a deficit with that?"

S. R. Bowen, counsel for the Capital Transit Co., asked Keeler what he meant by the 'stretch-out" system.

"It means making one man do the work of two," Keeler replied.

"Are you, and is labor opposed to labor-saving machinery?"

No, but the one-man car is not a labor-saving device. It will require one man to use the same machinery to do two men's work."

Keeler scoffed at the company's claims that safety devices make the one-man car safer than those manned by a motorman and a conductor. He said:

'I have been a machinist for 44 years and I have never seen an interlocking or automatic device that is foolproof. There should always be some human protection in addition to the mechanism."'

Declares Labor Opposed.

The Central Labor Union, with its 97,000 members, Keeler told the P. U. C., had voted unanimously against further installation of one-man cars.

Charles M. Maize, of the Kenilworth Citizens Association, joined other spokesmen for citizens organizations in opposing more cars of that type. He pointed out that the operator of a one-man car had to use a mirror to see the back doors. He also protested against the slowness of the cars. Recently, he said, he boarded a one-man car and found that the motorman had not yet collcted the fares of those who had boarded the car at the previous stop.

R. Ledger, of the Rhode Island Avenue Citizens Association, and Harry S. Wender, secretary of the Southwest Citizens Association, added their protests to the record.

Representatives of other civic bodies will testify today, and the hearing probably will be ended in the late afternoon.

Leave Denied 50; Clerks to Fight

A grievance committee of Lodge 249, American Federation of Government Employes, told Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen yesterday that of the 127 employes discharged recently from the District public assistance division for reasons of economy, 50 had been denied their accrued annual leave.

Miss Edna Kury, chairman of the committee, pointed out that this was in violation of a recent executive order by President Roosevelt.

The committee plans to call today on Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor. If he is unable to help, the commitee threatens to carry its fight to the White House.

Clark Griffith to Talk To Round Table Today

Clark Griffith, president of the Washington Baseball Club, will be the speaker at the weekly luncheon of the Washington Round Table at 12:30 p. m. today at the University Club.

He will discuss "The All Star Game for Washington in 1937."

Meanwhile, it was announced by officials of the Round Table that the organization had pledged $100 to Neighborhood House for the operation of a bus.

Plans Solo Ride to San Francisco

Young Horsewoman Plans Solo Ride to San Francisco

Louise Lloyd Intends to Average 30 Miles Daily; Delivery of Two Thoroughbreds in Honolulu by New Year's Her Goal.

Louise Lloyd, who didn't know beans about horses this time a year ago, was busily engaged yesterday making plans for her solo horseback ride to San Francisco.

"I think I'll start Wednesday," said the brown-eyed girl, who looks to be about 22 (one doesn't ask women, however young, their age) "Bucellus, Denny and I hope to average 30 miles a day. That would put us in San Francisco early in December and Honolulu by New Years."

Bucellus and Denny are horses, 4 and 3 years old, respectively. Upon them Miss Lloyd is depending to make her the first woman ever to cross the continent alone on horseback.

"At least," she said, "I've never heard of it being done before."

But Miss Lloyd, who teaches women and children horsemanship at the Rock Creek Riding Club, is not undertaking the venture as a stunt. It's strictly a business trip for the purpose of (1) determining the fitness of thoroughbreds for cross-country travel and (2) delivering Bucellus and Denny to a Honolulu stable.

Boss Finally Agrees.

It took no little amount of pressure talk on Miss Lloyd's part to sell William Todd, her boss, on the idea of allowing her to ride Bucellus and Denny to the Golden Gate. Owner of the Rock Creek and Honolulu stables and many others in the East, Todd had figured on shipping the gelding and colt.

But Miss Lloyd, whose grandmother migrated from Kentucky to Texas in a covered wagon, always has wanted to do something big, something different, as an equestrienne. She realizes the dangers involved, that she must cross deserts, face drought, ford treacherous streams and climb mountains, but her greatest concern is for her mounts' feet.

Although she was born on a Texas farm, right in the heart of the mustang country, Miss Lloyd never really rode until she was 15. She did a mite of riding then, only to quit the saddle until last August, when she got a job as a sort of handy girl around the Rock Creek stable.

Studied to Be Teacher.

"I studied to be a school teacher at the College of the Ozarks (Arkansas), finishing my studies spring a year ago," she said. "But I don't want to teach school. Before I took up horses I wanted to go into aviation. Now I just want to be a good horsewoman."

Even before she mentioned aviation, the temptation was there to compare her to Amelia Earhart. Short cropped hair. Bronzed skin. Eyes that shine determination. And above all, that trail-blazing temperament.

Miss Lloyd will ride Bucellus and Denny alternately, though she thinks the former will be under her most of the time. If drought conditions are still bad when the trio hit the Great Plains, feed will be shipped ahead to camps and stables along the route.

As a conditioner, she made a 600-mile jaunt by horseback from Columbia, S. C., to Washington recently, reaching the trail's end last Saturday. A girl friend made the trip with her. They finished strong, making it home from Fredericksburg in a single day. The horses were not the ones Miss Lloyd will ride to the West Coast.

Schaffer, night manager of the N. D. Butler garage, in the 1100 block of Twentieth street northwest, said the men entered the shop brandishing revolvers. They threatened him, took the money and fled in a black sedan that was waiting outside.

Andrew Manley, 1729 Eleventh street northwest, was robbed of $3 and a gray coat when he was set upon by three men while walking at Eleventh and T streets northwest. Manley told police the men jumped on him from behind.

Charles W. Claggett, 28, of Highlands, Va., reported to police two youths grabbed him while he was walking at North Capitol and I streets and robbed him of $53.

Clagett said the youths approached him from behind and that one of them held him by the throat while the other looted his pockets. The bandits escaped through an alley, he said.

Barney Munitz, 306 Fourth street southwest, was robbed of $82 by an unidentified sneak thief who picked his pockets while he was asleep in his automobile, parked at Thirteenth and K streets northwest.

New Routings Of Street Cars Start Sunday

Mt. Pleasant, Fourteenth Street Shifts Among Major Changes.

Shuttle Service on N. Y. Avenue for 2 Blocks to Begin Today.

The major shuffle in street-car routes, promised at the time Washington's two traction companies were merged into the Capital Transit Co., will become an actuality Sunday.

The company has spent $444,000 uprooting tracks at some points and laying them in others to provide for the re-routing changes.

The result should be more direct travel in the downtown areas and a lessening of traffic congestion. After Sunday there will be no more streets with two sets of double tracks such as ribboned Fourteenth street between New York avenue and H street.

Here are the new routings as approved by the Public Utilities Commission:

Mount Pleasant line—The Mount Pleasant-Thirteenth and D streets northeast line, which has been operated from Seventeenth street east over H street and through the downtown district by way of Fourteenth street and F street, will continue down Seventeenth street to Pennsylvania avenue. There it will turn east on Pennsylvania to Fifteenth street, go south on Fifteenth to G and turn east on that street, rejoining the old route at Fifth street and returning by the same streets to Mount Pleasant.

Continue Rush Service.

The Mount Pleasant—Third and Indiana avenue and the Mount Pleasant-Lincoln Park lines will not be changed, continuing to use H street, Fourteenth street and F street through the downtown area. Rush hour service from Mount Pleasant to Potomac Park will be continued.

Fourteenth street—One Fourteenth street line will continue south of New York avenue to the Bureau of Engraving and the Water street loop, returning the same way.

Takoma-Navy Yard and Fourteenth and Decatur-Eighth and F streets northeast—Cars now running between Fourteenth and Decatur streets and Eighth and F streets northeast (via Union Station) and between Takoma Park and the Navy Yard, which now make the "loop" around Fifteenth street, will continue straight down Fourteenth street to Pennsylvania avenue, turning east there. They will return over the same streets.

The week-day service recently inaugurated between Fourteenth and Decatur streets and Washington Circle will be changed only in its western terminus, which will be at Nineteenth and F streets instead of the circle. There will be some rush hour service between Fourteenth street points and Potomac Park.

To Use H and N. Y. Avenue.

H street-New York avenue line to Washington Circle—Cars now running from Fifteenth and H streets northeast and points east of Fifteenth and H (Columbia line), with their western terminus at Fifteenth and New York avenue (Treasury), will run between those same eastern points and Washington Circle, using H street and New York avenue as far as Fifteenth street, and thence into Pennsylvania avenue and on west.

Brookland line to Potomac Park—Cars operated between Brookland or Catholic University and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which used Fourteenth street south of G street, will continue through on G street to Fifteenth street, then north and west into Pennsylvania avenue and to Potomac Park.

Beginning early this morning, a shuttle street car service will be operated on New York avenue between Twelfth and Fourteenth streets.

Autoist Wins Stay in Loss Of His Permit

Show-Cause Order Issued Against Officials of District.

One License Is Revoked, 24 Are Suspended by D. C. Board.

Attacking the right of the District Commissioners and the Board of Revocations and Restorations of Operators Permits to suspend his driving license, Bernard G. Viens, 5603 Georgia avenue northwest, yesterday obtained in District Court a rule from Jusice Oscar R. Luhring requiring the Commissioners and the board to show cause July 23 why they should not be enjoined from suspending the permit.

Through the law firm of Welch, Daily & Welch, Viens said he had been convicted only of first-offense speeding and had been fined $10 last March. In April, he said, he was notified his permit was suspnded for 30 days, but on appeal, the suspension was cut to 15 days.

The presence of Inspector B. A. Lamb of the Police Department on the board of revocations was cited as being illegal in view of the law that directs policemen should engage only in the duties of law inforcement. Other duties it was shown are denied members of the force.

25 Lose Permits.

Attorneys representing Viens said they also would base their attack on the suspension of his permit on the allegation that the law giving the right of suspension to the Commissioners was an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power.

Meanwhile 25 motorists lost their driving permits yesterday when the revocations board revoked one license and suspended the others for temporary periods. Revoked was that of Louise Blakely 1021 Howard road southeast 60 miles.

The permit of John W. Dews 1523 Swann street northwest was suspended for 45 days on his conviction of second offense speed of 45 miles and Leroy E. Little 606 F street northwest lost his license for a similar period for a second offense speed of 48 miles.

Other Suspensions.

Thirty-day suspensions—Albert T. Arel, 312 Thirteenth street southeast, 45 miles; Mariano Adriani, 637 Tenth street northeast, 45 miles; Roland L. Andrews, Camp Springs, Md., 44 miles; Charles E. Brown, 1827 Lamont street northwest, 46 miles; Russell J. Carroll, 807 Seventeenth street southeast, 48 miles; George F. Cravatt, 1750 Sixteenth street northwest, 50 miles; William F. McCombs, 2034 Fourth street northwest, 42 miles; Lawrence D. McIntyre, 4209 Alabama avenue southeast, 46 miles; Milton A. Watts, 506 G street southeast, 42 miles; Thomas E. Winslow, 1805 Brentwood road northeast, 50 miles.

Fifteen-day suspensions—Murray L. Wolfe, 1222 Concord avenue northwest, 35 miles; Lee F. Vernam, 1317 Eleventh street northwest, 36 miles; John L. Burns, 104 Fourth street northeast, 38 miles; Ralph A. Carpenter, 1400 Kearney street northeast, 36 miles; James L. Cloud, 2243 Shannon place southeast, 35 miles; Richard J. Comiskey, 1123 Third street northeast, 38 miles; Walter L. Ellison, 2311 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, 38 miles; Warren L. Love, 1439 South Carolina avenue southeast, 40 miles; John T. McCoy, 1405-A South Capitol street, 36 miles; Andrew H. McKenney, 2215 Tunlaw road northwest, 40 miles; William H. Nonsupport Cases Up 5-Fold In Juvenile Court Since 1930

Fewer Commitments Made, Allowing More Money for Children.

One thing Judge Fay Bentley, of the Juvenile Court, finds hard to understand is how thousands of persons can go on year after year thinking the court deals only with children when more than half its actual time is devoted to adult cases.

"Of course, the welfare of children is involved in those adult cases," she explained yesterday as she left the bench at the close of a "nonsupport day." On Thursdays the men who have been charged by their wives with not contributing to the support of their minor children are haled into court. Nonsupport cases are heard also on Tuesdays. In the fiscal year which ended July 1, Judge Bentley heard 906 of these trials.

"And yet," she said, "mention juvenile court to thousands of persons in Washington and they will be surprised to learn that we have jurisdiction over anyone above 16 years of age."

The year just closed is by far the biggest the court has had, the records show. The nonsupport cases were almost five times as many as in 1930, yet the number of commitments was 5½ per cent less.

The fewer the commitments the more money is collected for the children, Judge Bentley pointed out. A man is committed to the workhouse only after he has shown beyond doubt that he is not going to contribute to his family's support, she said.

Few Cases Against Wives.

"We try to set a reasonable amount, after considering carefully how much the man makes and what his own living expenses should be," she explained. "Sometimes it's the man who brings charges against his wife for neglecting the children. But those cases are rare."

Less than 10 per cent of the couples brought before the bench are divorced, the court's records show. Many of them are sharing the same household, but feel they need the help of the judge in apportioning their obligations toward their children.

"Some of the men," said Judge Bentley, "expect the women to give the youngsters $50-a-week care on a $20-a-week budget. And some of the women expect the men to bring home more than their jobs will possibly pay them. Those difficulties can often be straightened out here in the courtroom."

The children themselves do not appear at the nonsupport hearings. But through the efforts of the court a total of $133,441.85 was collected for them in the year which ended July 1. That amount is $30,214.10 in excess of last year. However, there were 104 less cases in 1935.

Appropriation Smaller.

At the beginning of the fiscal year of 1937 two new adult probation officers and one clerk were added to the staff. But before that time there had been no increase in personnel since 1930, although the court's business had increased fivefold. The amount of money appropriated has actually decreased in that time.

In 1930, operating upnder the appropriation of $65,740, the Juvenile Court held 183 nonsupport trials and collected $74,692.25 for the support of minor children. For the fiscal year 1938 the appropriation was $64,940, while the number of cases soared to 906.

Judge Bentley's charts show that most of the parents who figure in nonsupport cases are young, one-third of the women being under 25 and one-third of the men being under 30. A little less than 60 per cent of all the cases are colored.

Most of the men haled into court are unskilled laborers. Out of the first 252 cases, 90 belonged to that group. Other classifications were: Unemployed, 52; skilled labor, 50; Government workers, 32, and irregular, 28.

Special Trains To Carry Voters Of City to N. Y.

Democrats Press Drive to Register 6,000 Residents Here.

The Democratic Absentee Voters Bureau, in an attempt to get out the votes of the 6,000 New Yorkers now residents of the District, has chartered special trains to New York to allow the voters here to register.

The trains leave here July 31 at 6 p. m. and August 1 at 12:30 a. m. Excursions to other sections will be conducted by the bureau at a later date.

Central registration dates are from July 1 to August 31 for cities of more than 50,000 population and from August 1 to August 31 for cities of less than 50,000.

The drive for maximum registration in New York State is one of the major activities of the bureau, which is sponsored by the Democratic Women's National Council, headed by Mrs. Arthur D. Condon and directed by Mrs. S. Jennings Asbury. The bureau's temporary headquarters are in the old District National Bank Building.

At the present time 40 States allow absentee voting. The bureau has a card index showing 146,000 qualified voters from those States and will undertake a campaign to get out their votes.

The National Republican Club, with headquarters at 1600 Rhode Island avenue northwest, also is establishing a service to facilitate absentee balloting. The service is directed by S. J. Prescott, president of the club.

Plan Offered For New Dike By Army Aids

Cammerer and Gartside Attack Proposal; Term It Unnecessary.

D. C. Group Postpones Action After Heated Discussion.

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission yesterday took under advisement arguments by Army engineers that a new flood control dike be erected on the line of Independence avenue from Fourteenth street to the Potomac River.

Arno B. Cammerer and Frank T. Gartside, speaking in behalf of the Capital park system, opposed the plan as one which would be inimical to development in the Monument Grounds and West Potomac Park. Cammerer is director of the National Park Service and Gartside is acting superintendent of National Capital Parks.

Called Inadequate.

They contended the present dike on the west grounds of Washington Monument and extending westward along the north edge of the Reflecting Pool to Lincoln Memorial is inadequate. Earlier this year Congress authorized construction of a permanent levee, provided one was deemed necessary.

After heated discussion, the planning body decided to defer action pending further study of both sides of the case. Stakes will be driven along the route of the proposed dike, which would be elevated 19 feet above mean low water, as an aid in visualizing the project.

T. C. Jeffers, landscape architect of the commission staff, submitted plans for landscaping the Federal building triangle which were drafted in co-operation with the Treasury Department, parks office and District Commissioners. They provide for planting of additional elm trees along Constitution avenue.

To Continue Studies.

The commission voted to authorize its staff to continue studies of the Washington-Baltimore-Annapolis regional plan, whose objective is the most propitious use of land in this triangular section. The following agencies are co-operating: National Resources Committee, Baltimore City Planning Commission, Maryland State Roads Commission, Maryland-National Capital Parks and Planning Commission, Maryland Forest Service, Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, Resettlement Administration and Department of Agriculture.

Concluding its two-day meeting today, the planning group will consider traffic problems, proposed changing of school hours, land purchases, revised plans for Judiciary Square, and the status of legislation.

D. C. Scientists Hope Figurine Holds Clew to Indian History

A figurine, sent here by a Louisiana woman has scientists of the Smithsonian Institution mulling anew over their theories on the Mound Builders—where they came from and what happened to them.

Yesterday's announcement of the acquisition compares the effigy, which is now being reassembled in the institution repair shop, to ship's wreckage which, washed ashore piece by piece eventually may tell what happened.

This particular clew is a hollow clay effigy of a human decorated with zoomorphic figures and a feathered robe. It was broken into five or six fragmnts when found in east central Louisiana. Mrs. U. B. Evans, of Alexandria, La., sent it to Frank M. Setzler, curator of anthropology of the Smithsonian.

Experts say this odd remnant of a lost civilization may constitute a missing link between the prehistoric Caddo Indians and the Southern Mound Builder complex which Setzler uncovered two years ago in Marksville, La.

"This, in turn, says the announcement, "overlaps a somewhat more advanced Mound Builder complex —the so-called southern Hopewell—which overlaps the northern Hopewell of the northern Ohio Valley region, where this particular Mound Builder culture attained its greatest heights."

The prehistoric Caddos are believed to have been antecedents of the historic Caddo Indians discovered by Hernado De Soto and christianized by early Spanish settlers in northwestren Texas.

Anita Loos Sees 'Romeo, Juliet' Film Preview

Author-Playwright Praises Performance of Norma Shearer in Movie.

By Anita Loos,
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Hollywood, July 15.—I have just come from the press review of Irving Thalberg's production of "Romeo and Juliet." It was an electric occasion, sparkling with a thousand high points of achievement, from the brilliant and heart-touching Juliet of Norma Shearer, through a list of performances, many inspired—all excellent—on down to the subtlest detail of a magnificent production.

I think the modern American girl has many things to learn from the Juliet of Norma Shearer, and I advise her to go about learning them right away, for, believe it or not, within a space of 20 minutes Juliet grabs off the best man in Verona, and does it at a time when he is singeing his fingers carrying a torch for another girl.

I have always been led to believe that girls should keep men guessing, and that no girl should ask a man his intentions regarding matrimony. These two rules Miss Shearer breaks the very first night she meets her man, which causes one to stop and ponder. Maybe the rules are no good, and then again maybe the Shearer technique of breaking them is what does the trick.

Girls, see Norma Shearer as Juliet, and good luck to you.

Even Stars Locked Out.

Hollywood's glamor boys and girls—usually sought after at all big previews—were turned into mere gate-crashers here tonight when Thalberg screened his production exclusively for newspaper writers. It was the first international press screening ever held and 900 newspaper, magazine and wire services were represented.

Despite the secrecy surrounding the initial showing of the Shakespearean film, thousands of Eager fans jammed the sidewalks around the little Four Star Theater—far off the beaten boulevards, among them on the outside and not looking in were top-rank movie stars, some of whom were successful in elbowing through in the best tradition of the late Tammany Young.

Norma Shearer—in person—attended the screening and received a terrific ovation from the audience for her superb, important playing of Juliet. She was besieged on the sidewalks by her fellow-stars asking for autographs in half-mock, half-serious imitation of the usual mob of waiting fans.

Howard a Polished Romeo.

Leslie Howard is a polished, a technically perfect Romeo. John Barrymore's Mercutio, and Edna May Oliver's nurse received laughter and general approval for their hearty back-slapping mannerisms. Basil Rathbone's Tybalt and Henry Kolker's Friar Lawrence were considered the most correct Shakespearean deportment.

But it was Miss Shearer's performance which proved a revelation to those who doubted that this popular star, bred solely by the screen, could enact so delicate a role and recite with convincing passion the love lines of the immortal bard.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has endowed the film with its most expensive raiment. Its pageantry and musical accompaniment approach a new high in the embellishment of dramatic works. The direction of George Cukor is scholarly, and there is little doubt that Shakespeare of the screen has passed the experimental stage.

"Romeo and Juliet" will play as a roadshow picture and will have its world premiere at the Astor Theater, in New York, following "The Great Ziegfeld." The tentative starting date will most likely be the last week in August.

Gov. Nice to Promote Col. Woodcock in Guard

Baltimore, July 16 (AP).—Gov. Harry W. Nice announced today he would promote Col. Amos W. W. Woodcock to brigadier general in the Maryland National Guard, to succeed Washington Bowie, who retires on November 20 because of age.

Brig. Gen. Bowie commands the Fifty-eighth Infantry Brigade of the National Guard. Col. Woodcock, former prohibition administrator, is now president of St. John's College in Annapolis, as well as a colonel in the Maryland National Guard.

About the Showshops

YESTERDAY'S glittering event in the drab and hungry lives of the drayma desks was the sumptuous champagne luncheon, spread with all the epicurean graces at the command of the Hotel Carlton by Mr. Hal J. T. Horan, Washington representative of Time, in compliment to Mr. A. K. Mills, visiting publicist who wields a facile pen in behalf of that magazine's screen subsidiary, "The March of Time."

NELSON B. BELL.

The small group of assembled guests, including Mr. and Mrs. Hardie Meakin, Bruce Powell, Thomas A. McAvoy, and my gay contemporaries, Betty Hynes and Edward de S. Melcher, from the habit of long experience, rather expected either Mr. Horan or Mr. Mills to take Time by the forelock, in a manner of speaking, and launch himself into some oratorical laudation of the admirable institution they represent with such luster, but no such conventional denouement obtruded itself to interrupt the easy camaraderie of a delightful hour and a half dedicated to a gourmet's masterpiece of gustatory inspiration.

It did come out, however, that a formal representation has been made to the State Department that the "clip" in the current release of "The March of Time," on view in Mr. Meakin's refrigerated temple of the gelatins, concerning the life and career of President Trujillo of Santo Domingo, is distasteful to the Dominican Legation in Washington. What the outcome, if any, will be, is a matter that may safely be left to the diplomatic sagacity of Secretary of State Cordell Hull and his able associates in the preservation of international amity.

It is reported, incidentally, that certain Santo Domingo expatriates have presented themselves to the management of RKO-Keith's to extend their congratulations upon the presentation of a brief screen resume of conditions which they insist are at fault only on the side of understatement. Which, as you might say, is what makes hoss racing!

To continue the gay round of festivities that has attended Mr. Mills' brief sojourn in the Capital, Mr. Powell is hosting in his Alexandria, Va., home tonight at 9, when the guests will be privileged to catch a preview glimpse of the next issue of "The March of Time," surrounded, of course, by embellishments suitable to the season and the hour.

* * * *

The tesselated elegance of the drayma department scarcely is regained when frothing postillions toss in notes conveying the gently bragging intelligence that Phil Hayden, foremost of the resident dancing masters, is sailing Friday aboard a fragile barque called the Bremen for three weeks of study in London and a later period of equal length devoted to acquiring whatever Paris may have that will add grace and novelty to the terpsichorean aspirations of those who learn to trip the light fantastic on Dupont Circle, and that Dan Terrell, mouthpiece of the Warner Brothers' publicity department in Washington, is off the same day for a fortnight of sand, sunburn and sea nettles at his faovrite Delaware beach. I still contend that Hains Point is a swell spot!

* * * *

Fulfilling a prediction that was made in this space the day announcement was made of the new name contest designed to equip Loew's Fox Theater with a more appropriate house signature, suggestions are pouring in upon the Loew executives by the ton. They started to arrive, as a matter of fact, almost before the ink in which the conditions of the contest were printed had had time to dry.

Naturally, the suggested new names for the Fox cover a tremendously wide range and no attempt has been made so far, even remotely to estimate what might possibly be the final winner. It is the wish of Loew's, Inc., to emphasize that reasons for the use of names submitted, not exceeding 50 words, will be a factor in deciding the eventual winner.

In self-protection, this column wishes to lay further stress on the fact that all communications in this contest should be addressed to Loew's Fox Theater and NOT to this newspaper. They are the boys who started it. Let them suffer the consequences!

It probably has been suggested several hundred times already, but in the back of what I still laughingly refer to as my mind I harbor the insistent conviction that Loew's Capitol Theater would be a fine bit of nomenclature for a playhouse in the Capital of the Nation. There is, of course, the inescapable handicap of a constant danger of being confused with the real U. S. Capitol in the delivery of faultily addressed mail and in certain other circumstances. Perhaps that is the reason there is no Capitol Theater here.

I cannot too strongly exhort actual contestants in the renaming bee not to accept this suggestion as an inspired "hunch" or an inside tip. It is neither. Bell is merely thinking out loud—or aloud, as the case may be—again. So pay no attention to it.

* * * *

The best show in town next Wednesday night, July 22, both from the standpoint of classy performers and distinguished audience, will be out at Prexy Griffith's concrete ball yard. That is the time and place the Messrs. Barney Ross, world's champion welterweight boxer, and Phil Furr, welterweight champion of the District, will tangle for ten rounds in an overweight match in which the title will not be at stake but a tremendous amount of pugilistic prestige will be. The advance demand for seats for this encounter, so I am informed, shatters all precedent in Washington in the history of legalized boxing. The fisticuffing next Wednesday night will draw patrons not alone from this city and immediate environs, but from nearby and distant cities as well. A large part of the proceeds will go to the Summer Camp Fund for Underprivileged Children, sponsored by The Washington Post and administered by the Allied Council of Social Agencies. I make no guarantees, but if any of the theater crowd are interested, I suggest that Bill McCormick, The Post's boxing expert in charge of arrangements, sits just across the room. Y'wekkum.

Claude Gillingwater, seated, an elderly and grouchy plate engraver, lends his unwilling skill to the nefarious purposes of Chester Morris and Marion Marsh—or so it would appear—in "Counterfeit," the thrilling film story of the illicit money-makers and the Secret Service men of the Treasury Department, the T-Men, if you will. "Counterfeit" is the new Columbia screen production being shown for the week beginning today as chief feature of the bill at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater. Margot Grahame, remembered with Victor McLaglen in "The Informer," also is importantly cast in this exciting melodramatic subject.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Directed by . . .

Hollywood, July 16.

On the credit side, before every picture starts, there is the line which reads "Directed by . . ." and the name of the director. Movie fans know few directors. Here are a few pictures of the men who direct the pictures:

MAE WEST.

William Wellman: His most recent picture was "Robin Hood of El Dorado;" his greatest flicker was "Public Enemy." He is a middle-sized man, thinning brown hair, and with muscles like steel. He can take care of himself. On the set, he talks loudly, often rough, but he knows his business. He may direct a tender love scene, and say to the leading man: "Now grab that dame like she's the one you really want to love." He fools on the set, but is about the fastest shooting director in the business. There is never any telling what he'll do next. One day, he shouted to the troupe: "All right . . . So you're so good you don't need a director, eh?" He sat down in his chair and let the assistant director direct the scene.

* * * *

KING VIDOR. Among the many notable films he directed are "The Crowd," "Hallelujah" and "The Big Parade." Vidor is a quiet director. He doesn't make much noise on the set. He pays a great deal of attention to costumes. He has rehearsals to inspect the costumes. He actually dresses for his pictures. He claims that he never wears loud, flashy clothes on the set. He doesn't want his clothes to detract the attention of the performers.

* * * *

Richard Boleslawski. He is a 6-footer, weighing over 200 pounds, Polish and was a stage director. He came to Hollywood as a writer and got his chance at directing when Ethel Barrymore insisted that he direct the flicker "Rasputin." His latest flicker is "The Garden of Allah," the technicolor picture with Marlene Dietrich.

He seldom gets excited on the set. He takes his time and is a stickler for details. He still speaks with an accent.

While directing "The Garden of Allah" on the hot desert under the blazing sun, he had a battle scene between the Arabs and the soldiers. There were about 500 extras in this scene. Director Boleslawski started about 8 o'clock in the morning, personally placing each extra in the exact position he wanted him to stand for the battle. He completed his detail a little after 12 o'clock. Then Director Boleslawski yelled: "Lunge," meaning to rehearse the first step in the battle. Because of his dialect the 500 extras believed he said "Lunch," left their positions and raced for food.

* * * *

Henry Hathaway. His latest flicker is "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," and he is now getting ready to direct Mae West in "Personal Appearance." He is fair-skinned, blued-eyed, good-looking, and rose from the ranks. He was an assistant director. He really knows the camera. He pays a great amount of attention to details. If there is a piece of string on a table in a sequence, he knows exactly where that string was whenever he returns to that scene. He generally stands behind the camera while shooting. Without meaning to, he makes faces at the actors while they are performing.

Olympic Group Rejected $100,000 Offer From Food Concern

Firm Sought Ad in Return For Gift

$10,000 Check With the Offer; Food Was to Be on Athletes' Menu.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

Aboard S. S. Manhattan, En Route to Berlin, July 16.—Avery Brundage, chairman of the American Olympic committee, revealed today that the financially harassed Olympic organization rejected a $100,000 offer from a breakfast food concern in return for inclusion of the product on the athletes' menu and permission to advertise the fact.

"I had a check for $10,000 in my hand and the balance was promised in nine installments," Brundage said. "Though tempted to accept this means of solving most of the money worries, the committee finally rejected the offer on the ground that it would be unethical and set a precedent injurious to sport."

The training table restrictions on the entire team were lifted today as the result of protests of insufficient quantity and variety in the original menus. The regular ship's menu will be available for all meals with the teams responsible for arranging their own diet. The athletes also have been put on their honor to use best judgment and not indulge in fondness for sweets and pastries.

The athletes are required to check their weight and keep a daily chart, however. Both Brundage and Lawson Robertson, head coach for track and field, appealed to the athletes to conscientiously observe the 10 o'clock curfew rule and to refrain from gambling with cards or dice.

"There is no objection if the athletes in some sports, such as the field events, indulge in an occasional smoke or glass of beer if they are so accustomed," Brundage said. "Otherwise the regulations will be strictly enforced.

"This is no joyride. It has been a struggle to organize and finance this team with many difficulties to overcome. Now it is up to the athletes to show determination and do their part."

The disclosure that anti-Nazi propaganda had been distributed surreptitiously aboard aroused the ire of Brundage. Gordon (Slinger) Dunn, discus thrower from Fresno, Calif., turned over to Brundage a pamphlet which several athletes found in their staterooms attacking alleged Nazi atrocities and racial and religious discrimination.

Brundage protested to the ship's officers, asking them to investigate. An investigation revealed, however, that there had been no general distribution of the pamphlets.

The condition of Harold Smallwood, national 400-meter champion who suffered an attack of appendicitis yesterday, continued to show improvement. Al Ulbrickson, Washington crew coach, was worried over the sea sickness of two of his lightest oarsmen—Don Hume, stroke, and Herbert Norris, bow. Both lost weight during the hot weather and expected to put on pounds during the trip across the Atlan... They were confined to their cabins, disdaining any food.

Jacobs Wants Furr, Ross Bout in Gotham

By Bill McCormick.

Mike Jacobs, this generation's premier promoter, wants a return bout between District Welterweight Champion Phil Furr and World Welterweight Champion Barney Ross, for New York, if the local hope succeeds in beating the ring's greatest fighter at Griffith Stadium next Wednesday night.

Jacobs, who steered Joe Louis to the fistic heights, yesterday wired an offer to Ralph Murdock, Furr's manager, for the return—which would involve the world title—and indicated he would be a spectator at the Washington bout.

Tickets for the outstanding fight of champions, which will be refereed by all-time Champion Jack Dempsey, were placed on sale yesterday. They may be purchased at Joe Turner's Ticket Office, Annapolis Hotel; Goldie Ahearn's, Ninth and E, or at the cashier's window, lobby floor, Washington Post.

Summer Camp.

The contest is being held for the benfit of the Summer Camp Fund for underprivileged children, sponsored by The Washington Post. The ticket office in The Post Building will remain open 24 hours a day, every day in the week. To supply the unprecedented demand for tickets, Turner's office will be open until 8 o'clock every night, including Sunday, until the day of the fight.

The offer from Jacobs for a return bout served to prove that Furr is being given the best chance any local boy had when he tangles with Ross. Should he defeat Ross it is almost a certainty that New York Promoter Jimmy Johnston, Jacobs' arch-rival, also would start bidding for his services—and thus would Phillip find himself in the middle of a very desirable situation.

At the present time the welterweight situation is in very much the same muddle as is complictaing the heavyweight division. Jacobs holds a contract on Ross and Johnston holds contracts on practically every other worthwhile contender, excepting Furr. Furr is almost universally conceded a very good chance of turning the tables on the world champion because of his terrific punching power.

The world champion yesterday selected the Woodmont Country Club as the best site for his training. A devout Jew, Ross, whenever possible, establishes his training camp among his own people. For that, and several other reasons, he chose the Woodmont Club for his conditioning site.

Because the Woodmont Club is a

C. U. Will Play Home Tilts at Brookland

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A decision to play all of Catholic University's home football games at Brookland, shifting those previously booked at Griffith Stadium to the school campus, has been made by university officials, The Post learned last night.

Following closely in the wake of multitudinous rumors, usually divided into two schools, viz: (a) that Mgr. Joseph Corrigan, recently appointed rector, is opposed to varsity sports on a major scale, and (b) that he is an ardent supporter of varsity competition on a high plane, the decision probably will have only two important repercussions.

The first, and most evident of these, is that Catholic's withdrawal from the ball park leaves the center stage of collegiate football activities free and clear to Georgetown and George Washington, thereby terminating a bitter but always diplomatic struggle for the most favorable dates at the park. An internecine warfare that at times threatened to flare out into open combat.

Secondly, after enjoying their most successful campaign on the gridiron, sweeping through a regular schedule of nine game with but a single defeat, and capping this record with a sensational 20-19 victory over Mississippi in the Orange Bowl encounter, the Flying Cardinals are returning to their home lot with its dreaded spectre of slim crowds and financial disaster.

Improvements will be made on the Brookland Stadium, notable the erection of a new fence within the barrier already erected around the horseshoe, addition of box seats, and buckets of paint to refurbish the faded green of the stadium proper.

It is not known who ordered the wholesale transfer of games to Brookland. Mgr. Corrigan and Director of Athletics Arthur J. (Dutch) Bergman could not be reached, but from an unimpeachable source it was revealed that Catholic's future policy will be to present its football in a truly collegiate setting.

Allen Shuts Out A's, 7-0; Tribe Takes 2d

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, July 16.—Johnny Allen pitched the Cleveland Indians into second place in the American League today, shutting out the Athletics with five hits, 7 to 0, as Detroit lost to New York.

Allen was in trouble on only two occasions, the third and the eighth, but fast fielding pulled him through. In the third he issued two of his three bases on balls and Moses beat out a bunt to fill the bases with two out. Averill went far back to nab Puccinelli's drive for the third out.

Louis 'Doping' Is Blamed on Extortion

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, July 16.—John Roxborough, one of Joe Louis' managers, said today the fighter had signed an affidavit in which he charged reports that he was "doped" during his fight with Max Schmeling grew out of an extortion attempt.

Roxborough said the affidavit charged Louis had received threats to ruin his married life from a Chicago Negro.

Roxborough said the man "went to Julian Black, co-manager of Louis, in Chicago, and thretaened an alienation of affection suit against Louis. Black bought him off for $300."

Chicago, July 16.—Joe Louis wants to start his comeback campaign in September with Max Baer as his opponent and Soldier Field, Chicago, as the proving ground.

The co-managers of the Brown Bomber, Julian Black and John Roxborough, definitely made this decison today. They urged Mike Jacobs, head of the Twentieth Century Sporting Club, to capture Baer if possible. If the match is made, they want the same promotional setup which handled the Louis-Levinsky fight in Comiskey Park last September. Joe Foley, of Chicago, in co-operation with Jacobs, was the promoter. That fiasco, with Levinsky surrendering in the first round, drew 39,000 spectators with gross receipts of $214,000.

Nats Lose, 9-7, To Chicago; Skid to 5th

3 Pitchers Give Game Away; Mates Outhit White Sox, 15-10.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

The Nats performed the feat of outhitting the White Sox, 15 to 10, yesterday, and losing the ball game, 9 to 7. Coincidentally they skidded out of the first division into fifth place.

In the light of the Nats' slugging, it required some rather inexpert pitching by the Washington pitchers to bring about the unhappy results for the Nats, but they were equal to it. Pete Appleton, Bill Dietrich and finally Jimmy DeShong succeeded in pitching the ball game away.

At one point in the proceedings the Nats had overcome the effects of Appleton's wildness and downright ineffective pitching, wiping out a 4-0 lead of the White Sox and forging to the front, 7-5, but they could not contena with the sabotage effected by Dietrich and DeShong in the late innings.

Cascarella Effective.

It might have ended happily for Washington had Joe Cascarella not been forced out of the ball game in the sixth inning by the need of a pinch hitter. Cascarella was the only Washington pitcher who limited the White Sox to anything less than a slew of runs. Relieving the wastrel Appleton in the second inning, he stopped that Chicago threat and held the Sox to a lone run during the next five innings.

The White Sox tied the score against Dietrich in the seventh and won the ball game against DeShong in the eighth and ninth, with Clint Brown holding the Nats in check after they had shelled Merritt Cain from the box in the sixth.

Trailing 5-7 when they met up with Dietrich, the Sox put the tying runs on base with one out when Dietrich walked Haas and Bonura. With two out, Hayes looped a double into right field that scored one run and Dietrich filled the bases by walking Dykes. At this point DeShong made his appearance and promptly walked Sewell to force in the tying tally.

The Sox bounced back at DeShong for their winning run in the eighth. With two out, Haas drew a walk and Bonura lashed a double against the left-field fence on which Haas scored with a brilliant burst of speed.

They upped their lead to the Lehman, Haas Beat Walker Cup Stars in Western Amateur Tourney.

By the Associated Press.

Omaha, Nebr., July 16.—Comeback-bound Johnny Lehman, of Chicago, and slender Freddie Haas, jr., of New Orleans, completed the rout of the Walker Cup delegation in the thirty-seventh annual Western Amateur Golf Tournament today by brilliantly fashioned triumphs over Charlie Yates, of Atlanta, Ga., and Omaha's Johnny Goodman.

Tall Johnny Lehman, who won the 1932 Western crown, but who has done little of note in championship golfing warfare for the last few years, took Defending Champion Yates out of action in their second-round battle, 2 and 1, over the Happy Hollow Club's parched course.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Mr. Pete Appleton,
Griffith Stadium.

Dear Pete: Just a few lines to let you know I'm sorry. I feared the worst yesterday when I suggested to Bucky Harris in this space that he give you a chance to pitch a ball game, seein' as how you hadn't pitched one since June 8 when you beat Cleveland, 2 to 1, with five hits.

It's uncanny, Pete—this Povich curse. One itty, bitty paean of praise from Povich and a guy is apparently foredoomed. In your case, Pete, I was plugging you with a heart full of good wishes and a mind full of misgivings. I shouldn't a-done it, I know now. I knew it yesterday in that second inning when everything you shoved across the plate was smacked right back at you for hits; that is when you weren't walking those White Sox.

POVICH.

Honest, Pete, I'm sorry, but I guess I should a-known it would happen. You might have made out okay if it hadn't been that I okayed ya. You really didn't have a chance after that. In case you forget, I'm the guy who picked Dempsey in both his Tunney fights, the Red Sox to win the pennant, Richmond to take Grant, and Ethiopia to annex Italy before the rainy season ended.

When you were out there in the box getting the works in that second inning yesterday, Pete, I was suffering with you. I'd a-been grateful if the press box had opened and swallowed me up and interred me right in the concrete. All my pals upstairs were giving me the works and I thought I noticed a coupla smirks on faces down there in the Washington dugout, where a lot more of my good friends hang out.

I'm really sorry, Pete, about the nice things I had to say about ya. The worst part of it is, I guess, is that you probably won't get a chance to pitch again for weeks and weeks. If they didn't start you back in five weeks after you pitched that five-hit game, then you can figure out for yourself how long you're gonna stay on the bench this time—after that performance yesterday. I'll be seein' ya out there about September 26, I guess.

I dunno what to do to make amends, Pete, but I'll try. Seein' as how no good ever comes to the guys I plug in this space, it gives me an idea. Henceforth and henceforward, never fear, Pete, I'll never say nuthin' nice about ya, as a personal favor. If you've stumbled through this thing this far, listen to me while I try to make amends. It ought to work:

Appleton, as a pitcher, you belong in the hayloft. I doubt if you ever win another game this season. Or any other season. If Bucky Harris starts you again on the mound he ought to be shot, and have his head examined—afterward. Why don't you try house canvassing? One of these days you're gonna forget to duck out there on the mound and the team will be rid of a guy who had no business in the big leagues in the first place.

And as far as that ball team you're connected with, Appleton, it ain't gonna get nowhere, either. Newsom can't be lucky all the time; DeShong is just a minor leaguer with a funny motion the hitters are catching onto; Whitehill never could pitch, and you know what I think of you.

Ossie Bluege's a pretty fair hitter, but he can't field; Red Kress has

Post Gives Challenge Trophy for Mid-Atlantic Singles Play

Offer Is Held Big Boost to Tourney

Cup Must Be Won Three Times by Same Player for Possession.

By John R. Vosburgh.

The continued upswing in Washington tennis received another distinct contribution yesterday with announcement that The Washington Post is offering a costly challenge trophy for the Middle Atlantic men's singles championships, opening Monday, August 3, at the Edgemoor Club.

President Thomas A. Mangan, of the Middle Atlantic Lawn Tennis Association, in accepting the offer, predicted that the tournament will become the city's biggest tennis event. The trophy will be up for competition to be retired after three legs have been won on it by the same player.

Mangan said, "The Middle Atlantic Association deeply appreciates the offer of The Post in aiding its tournament. The association will make an effort with the Edgemoor Club and The Post in making the tournament the crowning event of the season."

Already, Mangan said, entries are expected from Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Morgantown, W. Va.; Baltimore; Charleston, W. Va.; Wheeling, W. Va.; White Sulphur Springs, Richmond, Lynchburg and other cities in addition to Washington.

The association, he added, will send the winner of the tournament to the National Singles championships at Forest Hills, expenses paid. The association's president pointed out that the event is to be held at a time when it will be the most important tournament in the area.

Mangan and Joseph Furtley, treasurer, explained that the Post's offer solves a serious problem for the association. A first class trophy has been the aim of the organization ever since the Edgemoor Club decided to sponsor the tournament.

Edgemore, incidentally, has become more or less of a god-father to Washington tennis. Under the presidency of John Gray and with its live-wire new membership of Thomas Markey, Dooley Mitchell, Hugh Lynch, Ralph McElvenny, Tony Latona and others, it has given the sport here a boost which has lifted it to new heights. Recently, with aid of The Evening Star, the City of Washington tournament was conducted at Edgemoor on a scale never before attained with this event.

was selected last spring, swung his clubs for a rousing 34-35—69, three under orthodox figures, to conquer Goodman, Walker cupper, former National Open champion and the tournament favorite, 1 up, on the final hole of another second-round tussle. Goodman, 1 down at the turn, fought his way back to even terms, but faltered on the final hole.

The third member of the cup squad, Oklahoma City's Walter Emery, failed to qualify for the match play division of the tournament, winding up yesterday with 75—78—153.

Tigers Welcome Cochrane Back at Helm

Detroit Loses To Yanks, 5-2, Falls to 3d

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 16.—The Yankees overcame the Tiger threat for the second straight day today, coming through with a 5-to-2 decision to increase their circuit lead to ten games and club the Detroits back into third place in the American League.

Johnny Brocaca, most improved Yankee hurler since early June, limited the Tigers to eight hits as the Yanks made it two out of three over the world's champions, through timely hitting off Tommy Bridges.

With Cleveland defeating Philadelphia, the Tigers were shoved back into third place by half a game, as the Indians took over the runner-up berth.

a weak arm; Joe Kuhel is a bust, and that Buddy Lewis on third base can't hit, field or throw. Bolton couldn't hit big league pitching in a million years, and that outfield of Stone, Chapman and Travis couldn't get a ball back to the plate if their throws were placed end to end.

In fact, I doubt if this ball club wins another game all season. In fact, they'll probably get licked by the White Sox today about 19 to 1. I don't know where that one run is coming from, I'm just being generous.

Personally, I'm picking the club to finish last. The Yankees will have the pennant sewed up by August 15; Lou Gehrig will hit 250 home runs before the season is over; DiMaggio will have a batting average of .350 and Washington will be so far in the cellar they'll have to probe for 'em to start spring training in 1937.

Dusek Thrown By Managoff At Stadium

Tables Turned in Rough Bout; Barber Is an Easy Winner.

Ivan Managoff turned the tables on Ernie Dusek at Griffith Stadium in a bout that was literally and figuratively dirty from start to finish. Ivan slapped Ernie's shoulders to the mat for the necessary three-count, while he himself, was in the embarrassing position of being held in a head scissors.

The affray, which ended exactly opposite to the manner in which these burp boys terminated a previous meeting just one week ago, was witnessed by an enthusiastic crowd of about 3,000.

The action was figuratively dirty for about half of the 43½ minutes it lasted, as earnest Ernie employed first one rough tactic then another against poor Ivan. He gouged Managoff's eyes, kicked him in the brisket, twisted his fingers and otherwise conducted himself as no gentlemanly grappler would dream of conducting himself.

After that, the exhibition became literally dirty as both participants started spending much of their time outside the ring, grovelling in the dust, most of which they brought back into the ring with them.

In a semifinal scheduled for 30 minutes, Cliff Olson tossed Tex Morgan in 16¾ minutes.

In other bouts scheduled for 30 minutes, Little Beaver labored to a draw with Abe Coleman, Henri Piers tossed George Wilcheski in 18 minutes, and Hank Barber disposed of Jim Wallis in 12 minutes.

Maryland Club to Have 7-Goal Star for Polo Title Tourney

By John R. Vosburgh.

A special provision of the United States Polo Association will allow the colorful internationalist, Cyril Harrison, to play here today in the opening game of the Southeastern polo championships. Harrison, one of the country's foremost poloists, will be at No. 3 position for the Maryland Polo Club, of Baltimore, when that team meets the Third Cavalry Yellows, of Fort Myer, on the West Potomac Polo Field at 4 p. m.

The ruling of the national body reached Capt. C. H. Reed, tournament manager, late yesterday afternoon and blasted a protest of Fort Myer against the Maryland Club's use of Harrison. The latter is one of the few 7-goal players in the country. Under the national rules of the divisional tournaments, a player must not play if he has more than a 6-goal handicap.

The Two Are Favorites.

Harrison's presence on the Baltimore team gives it a 12-goal team handicap, as compared with the Third Cavalry's 11 goals. The luck of the draw pitted these two teams, the tournament favorites, against each other in the opening match. One veteran observer said yesterday that the winner of today's match will probably go on through to the tournament championship and be Southeastern section's representative in the National Championships at Cleveland.

The only other teams conceded a chance of stopping either the Maryland club of the Third Cavalry Yellows are the veteran Fauquier-Loudoun club of Virginia, the Sixth Field Artillery of Fort Hoyle, Md. and the Third Cavalry Greens of Fort Myer.

Orioles Lead League.

The Orioles took over undisputed possession of first place in the St. Anthony's Softball League last night, defeating the Hornets, 7 to 5. Gheen was the winning pitcher and Karpowitz the loser. S. Oliver hit a homer for the winners.

Hazel Bishopp Wins in Girls' Net Play

Charlotte Decker Scores, to Meet Helen Orme This Afternoon.

A newcomer to a city tournament, 16-year-old Hazel (Jimmy) Bishopp, of Tech High, gained the quarter-final round of the District girls' playground tennis championships yesterday at Chevy Chase playground, along with Charlotte Decker, a semifinalist last year.

Blasting out severely with a strong forehand, the tall, capable Miss Bishopp, representing Takoma Park Playground, brushed aside her chum, Valerie Loomis, of Chevy Chase, 6—0, 6—3. Miss Decker eliminated the tiny Takoma Park representative, Barbara Boose, 6—3, 6—1.

She will face Helen Orme, finalsit in 1934 and 1935, today the most promising match of the tournament thus far. Miss Orme, representing Burroughs Playground, was eliminated in the final round last year by Willie O'Steen, of Virginia Avenue, and the previous year by Camille Jacobs, of Montrose.

This year, she is out for the title with renewed endeavor, but already finds a formidable opponent in her path in the person of Miss Decker. The match will start at 5:30 p. m.

Charlotte Mataja, of Burroughs, gained the right to meet Defending Champion Miss O'Steen in a fourth-round encounter today by disposing of Rosie Rosenbloom, of Virginia Avenue, 6—0, 6—2. The Burroughs girl collides with the title-holder at 4 p. m.

All quarter-final matches will be played today and tomorrow. The semifinals are listed for Monday and the finals for Tuesday.

At Chevy Chase—Charlotte Decker (Janney) defeated Barbara Boose (Takoma Park), 6—3, 6—1; Hazel Bishopp (Takoma Park) defeated Valorie Loomis (Chevy Chase), 6—0, 6—3.

At Rosedale—Charlotte Mataja (Burroughs) defeated Rosie Rosenbloom (Potomac Avenue), 6—0, 6—2.

MELLOW VINTAGE TOBACCO

BOSTON, MASS., JULY 7—Boston's baseball fans know their cigars. And they appreciate the rich, mellow flavor of Vintage tobacco . . . a taste test, made at the All-Star ball game, proves it.

We chose 247 smokers at random from among the spectators . . . gave each man two unidentified cigars—a Vintage White Owl and another, representing the leading nationally advertised brands.

Each man smoked both cigars—indicated the one he liked best. The cigars bore no names or bands to prejudice. They chose by taste alone . . . for taste is the only thing that gives smoking pleasure. 82% preferred Vintage White Owl's mildness.

MORE SMOKING PLEASURE . . . Today's White Owl is a double "best buy." It's a Vintage cigar—and it's larger, too. Look at this actual-size picture. White Owl averages a 10% longer smoke than other widely advertised 5¢ cigars. Compare White Owl with your present brand. Taste the Vintage tobacco—see the extra size. Wherever you are, you can get the same mild, uniform Vintage cigar that won these taste tests. It costs but 5¢ at your nearest cigar store.

A FIELD FULL OF STARS . . . the pick of the players from both major leagues, the top men by popular vote of the fans . . . a thrilling battle of champions . . . a 4 to 3 score—it was a great baseball event for Boston. And in a vote taken while the game was played—4 out of every 5 men tested polled for Vintage tobacco flavor.

Stretch Run Gives Filly Victory

Third Straight Triumph, Sir Windsor Fails Near the Finish.

Boston, July 16.—Bunny Martin, 3-year-old daughter of Bunting, flying the silks of the Oak Tree Stable, scored her third straight victory of the Suffolk Downs meeting in the fifth race of the day, a mile and one-sixteenth claiming feature, before a crowd of 10,000 to pay $7.

Bunny Martin came from behind to win in the drive down the stretch and was timed in 1:46, slow time for the distance over this oval.

The pace-setting Sir Windsor finished a length back of the winner and a half-length in front of Paul Codd's Marcleave to pay $4.40 to place. The Codd colt brought $3 in the show slot.

Holds Lead.

Sir Windsor went right to the front and held a command until the field turned for home, where he found the drive of the winner too much to match.

Marcleave was held in third place most of the way, was never hustled, and finished in the same position with no discomfort at the end. Bristle and Mannerly were never factors.

JEANNE PETZKO, away well and in the forefront throughout, gained a slight lead nearing the stretch and, fighting it out gamely, lasted to stall off RIELTHING. The latter worked her way up steadily and closed with good speed through the stretch. GAYETTE was prominent all the way, fought it out determinedly, and only weakened in the last strides. FOXO, hard hustled from the start, gained a slight lead and weakened in the closing drive. TRAITRESS improved her position gradually and though closing ground was unable to threaten the leaders. GLOSS was unable to reach the leaders. BYPATH was shuffled back at the start and never could reach contention. JACMAR dropped back and was a trailer all the way.

RETIRED took command in the opening strides, drew away into a good lead and, steadied along in front, held ALANAD safe at the end. ALANAD, well placed all the way, responded gamely to punishment through the stretch and was gaining at every stride during the last furlong. BLIND BARNEY dropped back after the start, was placed under intermittent punishment, and closed stoutly in the last three-sixteenths. PETARD had good early speed, though unable to reach the leader and faltered in the closing drive. EXAGGERATION was unable to reach the leaders. POLLY BARCAROL was outrun.

GAY CREST was steadied along back of the early pace, went to the front when called upon, and drew clear in the last furlong. MEROVECH, under steadying restraint early, responded gamely when called upon, though unable to reach the winner. CHARMED EYES displayed good early speed, was much used in racing TOANO into defeat, and had nothing left when the winner challenged. BARBARA J, unable to rearing the finish. BLAST, away slowly, moved into contention with a rush, though up briefly was never in a position to endanger the leaders. ALBERT D. was never able to threaten. MOISSON was outrun.

RED WAGON dashed into command at once, drew clear in the first furlong, was steadied along in front and, despite bearing out in the stretch, held ROCK POINT safe. The latter, outpaced early, swung to the outside in the stretch and closed with a rush. UPSIDE DOWN, in near attendance of the pace, held on willingly to the close and will undoubtedly improve off this race. MINEY MYERSON went to the inside in the stretch and closed with good energy, though unable to reach the leaders. WISE ANNE weakened in the last five-sixteenths. BEST BID was never able to gain a forward position. ONRUSH, away poorly, had scant chance. GALON BOY had good speed for the opening three furlongs.

BUNNY MARTIN was raised along in nearest chase of the pace established by SIR WINDSOR, wore the latter down when reaching the stretch, and drew clear at the end. SIR WINDSOR outran his field to the first turn, was tried along from in front, and held on well after being supplanted from the lead. MARCLEAVE saved ground at the first turn, moved up to gain a prominent position, and was unable to reach the leaders under hard urging. CHRYSEIS, unable to keep pace, was going gamely to the end, though unable to endanger the leaders. MANNERLY was outrun throughout. BRISTLE was unable to keep up.

AUKAI, far back for the first half-mile, began moving up after rounding the far turn, responded gamely to punishment, and was alone in the closing stride to wear down KINDACORN. The latter gained clear sailing on the inside in the run down the backstretch, disposed of THIS WAY for the lead, drew clear before reaching the stretch, and just failed to last. MIDSHIPMAN, a trailer until leaving the backstretch, closed with a rush through the stretch. BLADE EDGE was taken back off the pace and was unable to reach the leaders when called upon. STONE MARTIN lost ground around the first turn, continued to race wide, faltering in the last quarter-mile. AMERICAN PRINCE tired. THIS WAY stopped badly in the last five-sixteenths.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HAPPY EASTER, $45.00, $17.20, $6.80; FLOWERY LADY, $7.00, $3.80; MASTER TIME, $3.00.

HAPPY EASTER, outrun and a trailer leaving the backstretch, moved up stoutly through the stretch and was up in the last stride. FLOWERY LADY, taken under stout restraint in the run down the backstretch, moved up stoutly when called upon in the closing drive, took command inside the last 20 yards and just failed to last long enough. MASTER TIME went to the front at once, was steadied along under slight restraint, was forced to meet determined opposition from SICKLE HOUR, and was unable to stave off the closing bids of the first two. BUD BROOM was well up all the way. SWEEPERMAN faltered in the last three furlongs. LILLIAN Z. was unable to reach the leaders. SICKLE HOUR moved up stoutly after rounding the far turn, gained a slight lead, but stopped badly through the stretch. GOLDEN WATCH had early speed.

MADWIND, under steadying restraint in the run down the backstretch, moved up fast to take command, bore in through the stretch and bothered LEONARD WILSON repeatedly, for which he was disqualified. LEONARD WILSON had speed from the start, was supplanted from the command, moved through on the inside at the stretch turn, was bumped several times in the last furlong and McDermott had to take up rearing the finish. BLAST, away slowly, moved into contention with a rush, though unable to improve his position in the closing test. SWEETBROOM had early speed, tiring badly. O'NEILL, restrained early, was unable to improve his position when placed under punishment. MT. HOOD was never prominent.

Dean Is Chased As Phils Beat Cards, 6 to 2

Victory Is 2d in Row Over St. Louis; Dizzy Not Yet in Form, He Shows.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, July 16.—Dizzy Dean faltered today, so did the Cardinals, and the Phillies won 6 to 2 for their second straight victory in this series.

The great Cardinal pitcher was making his first start since a line drive from the bat of Burgess Whitehead, Giant infielder, hit him in the head and knocked him unconscious last Saturday, and showed he was not yet ready for duty. He gave up seven hits in the five innings he toiled, including Leo Norris' fourth-inning home run, which drove in three runs and put Philadelphia into a lead it never relinquished.

Today's defeat was Dean's sixth of the season against 14 victories. It also dropped the Cardinals two full games behind the first-place Cubs, who nosed out Boston, 1 to 0, in 10 innings.

Out Fishin' . . . . .

By Jack Hawley.

An angler can but rub his eyes in amazement when he sees that it has been possible to accomplish what heretofore has been an impossibility: Catch a 7-foot sail fish swimming 1,000 miles away, 10 hours later. Eastern Air Lines are to be congratulated upon the success of their first attempt to bring the angler closer to his favorite fishing ground—Florida. Their new Flying Fish Club is going to bring many new members into its fold.

The first flight was made in a 14-passenger Douglas, powered by two whirlwind motors which lifted us off the Washington Airport at 10:45 last Thursday evening. We arrived in Miami at 6 a. m., where autos were assigned for use during our four days' visit as guests of Eastern Air Lines and the Miami Chamber of Commerce. Clothes were changed and we were on our way into the gulf stream an hour later.

Two hours later this writer caught his 7-foot sail fish, which was equaled three days later by Ollie Atlas, local tackle dealer. Ollie had his mounted, while the writer preferred sending his to the fertilizing plant because of the high cost of mounting—$1 per inch, which figured $84, more than the old bank roll contained.

Two days on the gulf stream removed all doubt as to which is the better time of year to fish the blue waters off Miami—summer or winter. Summer is by far the best bet because the waters are teeming with large game fish, ready to take your lure. The better fishing is over at Bimini, Bahamas Islands, where on July 10, Jereme Clark, of Cincinnati, Ohio, celebrated his catch of a blue marlin which boosted the Fairbanks to 706 pounds, which is 70 pounds heavier than the credited world record blue marlin caught in these same waters 13 months ago by Tommy Shevlin, of New York.

Two full days of fishing among the 10,000 islands in the Everglades convinced us more anglers should visit the Rod and Gun Club at Everglade City and try for the thousands of large tarpon which come into the fresh waters from the sea on each tide.

George Huber, editor of Rod and Stream, had the misfortune to be haunted by the worst luck we have ever witnessed, but his spirit of being a true sportsman who doesn't "gripe" is entered in our record book as an angler who can take his luck as he finds it and go back for more.

George hooked a large sail fish on Friday and after 29 minutes of furious battle, it was brought alongside, where the guide leaned over the side to handle the leader wire with left hand, while the right hand was already holding the gaff. The hook pulled free. He failed to get another strike.

On Saturday George hooked the largest tarpon seen in the Everglades in several weeks—well over 100 pounds, which would have had he succeeded in boating it, given him the gold-button award donated by the Rod and Gun Club. After several jumps and tearing off line at express-train speed, the captain assured him that the fish was thoroughly hooked and to prepare himself for a long, hard battle. On the last jump the huge tarpon fell across his light 12 thread line to part it. Again this 22-year-old lad showed his mettle. He tried it the second day, but failed to land a tarpon.

This writer fished deligently for two days but didn't get a tarpon strike. The heavy rains had raised the water causing the fish to leave for he gulf where they will stay until less fresh water abounds around the islands—then they will return to feed on the jumping mullet which infest these waters. After a dinner of frog legs brought in by Seminole Indians we departed for Miami to join the rest of the party where after an evening of sight-seeing we retired, arriving in Washington seven hours later.

For the angler who is possessed with his share of these worldly goods we recommend this 2,000-mile round-trip fight over Eastern Air Lines. One can make the trip and enjoy a ten-hour fishing day for deep sea gamesters and be back in his swivel chair within 36 hours. W. B. Briggs, district traffic manager, phone National 1037, is booking reservations which include every detail necessary to make your trip as delightful as the Flying Fish Club received, and enjoyed.

Chesapeake Bay Fishing.

Our scouts have been busy during our absence and are reporting some good catches of blue fish during the early morning and late evening in the vicinity of North and Southwest Middle Grounds. Most of the fish are being caught by trolling. Chumming, however, is being used during the heat of the day, but with only fair success.

Black bonito (cabio) is beginning to take on a different aspect with a large number of anglers heretofore spending their time catching hardheads and small trout.

Reports from the lower Rappahannock and York rivers area are very encouraging. Cut menhaden is used for bait.

Large catches of croakers are being caught daily at Solomons Island. Trout are beginning to put on their summer show, but are not weighing up to the 4-pound mark on last reports. The average now is around 2½ pounds. J. C. Lore, Harry Woodat Solomons, have sent in reports burn and other prominent boatmen too lengthy for publication.

Capt. J. C. Taliferro, Reedsville, Va., reports a catch of 30 large blues on the Middles which averaged seven pounds each. Mrs. M. M. Clanton, Irvington Beach Hotel, Irvington, Va., writes us she has five boats available for either river fishing for trout, hardheads, spot (Norfolk), etc., or for deep sea fishing there or over to Westland the present home of the black bonito (cabino). The latter rates are $10 and $12 per day; the former $3.00 from one to three persons, all above that number $1. extra.

Mr. Frank Sheehan of this city sends us word that the food and soft beds are tops for the price charged—$3 and $4 per day. Miss A. M. Eggers, 2714 Cathedral avenue northwest walks off with the first prize offered by Chesapeake Bay Fishing Fair Association—two hundred yards of Ashaway Sport Line—for her prize winning trout which measured 23 inches in length and weighed 5½ pounds caught off Hooper Island on June 28.

Chum is now available at the Lewis Ice Co., Ridge, Md., for anglers leaving St. Jeromes Creek and Drury's Wharf for the Middle Grounds, also at Galesville, Reedsville, Solomons Island and local Water street markets.

Capt. Dick Rogers, Piney Point, Md., tells us that the large rock fish are now feeding on soft shell crabs (who wouldn't at $1.50 per dozen, gratis). Twelve and 14 pounders are very game and capable of smashing up considerable tackle in jig time. The best time to fish for these fish is on the change of the tide.

Post Writer Lands Big Fish

Jack Hawley, whose fishing articles appear in The Post, apparently practices what he preaches. Here Hawley is pictured with a huge sail fish he caught the other day in Miami waters. He was on the cruiser Music Maid when he pulled in this baby. Notice the contrast in size of the other two fish and Hawley's giant catch.

Red Sox Divide With Browns, Drop First

St. Louis Wins, 6-3; Sox Take 2d, 5-4; Foxx Hits Home Run.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, July 16.—After blowing a 3-to-0 lead behind "Lefty" Grove to drop the first game, 6 to 3, the Red Sox put on a successful ninth-inning rally today against the St. Louis Browns and won the nightcap, 5 to 4.

Jimmy Foxx drove out his twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth homers. The first found Billy Werber on base during the first inning of the opener. The burly first sacker started the second game's last of the seventh inning by driving one of Al Thomas' pitches high over the leftfield fence.

In the second game the deadlock continued until the ninth when McNair singled, Cramer beat out a bunt, Berg sacrificed and Jack Wilson brought in the winning run by punching a hit through the Brown's indrawn infield.

Warneke Stars, Cubs Shut Out Bees, 1 to 0

Hurler Allows but Four Hits; Bill Herman's Hit Wins in 10th.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 16.—Lon Warneke pitched a ten-inning shutout today to give the first-place Cubs a 1-to-0 victory over the Boston Bees and the Chicago team its fourth consecutive triumph.

Warneke bested Ben Cantwell, yielding but four hits over the route, while the Cubs made seven off Cantwell, two of them in the tenth when Billy Herman singled to drive Billy Jurges home with the winning run. Jurges had doubled.

It was the second straight shutout credited to the Cubs and gave their pitchers a record of having allowed but one run in the last 28 innings against the Bees and Giants.

Crops Doomed, Corn Leads Soaring Grains

Again Rises 4-Cent Limit as Wheat Climbs 3½ Cents Higher.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 16.—Blistering heat predicted to continue, and the corn crop apparently headed for a worse failure than in 1934, sent all grain markets feverishly higher today.

With reports at hand telling of widespread irreparable damage to corn and that the crop had passed its point of endurance over huge areas from Oklahoma and Kansas eastward through Indiana, markets were overwhelmed with speculative orders to buy. As a result, corn prices soared to the limit for any single day, 4 cents a bushel, and despite big profit-taking sales, held all the gain.

Spurred also by news of increasing injury to Canadian crops, wheat jumped to around 3½ cents a bushel upward, but reacted when the Winnipeg market failed to hold well.

Corn closed buoyant, 4 to 4⅛ cents above yesterday's finish; July, 89; September, 87; December, 81⅞. Wheat, nervous, ⅞ to 1½ cents up; July, 1.06@1.06⅛; September, 1.05¾@1.05¾; December, 1.07@1.07¼. Oats, ⅝-1⅝ advanced; September, 39½@39⅝, and Rye showing 1¾-2 cents bulge. The provisions outcome was unchanged to 27 cents higher.

The closed United States Savings Bank has remaining assets estimated at $558,066.60, with unpaid liabilities of $719,951.61, according to the quarterly report of Receiver Carter B. Keene for the period ended June 30.

This institution, which has been the center of much controversy and litigation since it was closed March 5, 1933, has declared dividends of 80 per cent, on which the depositors have collected a total of $1,288,554.91.

Balance due to depositors, including interest to June 30, is listed at $614,798.62, while there still is due the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a total of $105,152.99.

Income from interest, premium, rents, etc., amounts to $214,883.51, which is larger than the cost of liquidation, listed at $117,603.29.

Secured liabilities have been paid in full, $499,193.12. No assessment has yet been levied against the stockholders.

The book value of remaining assets is listed at $897,763.81 and the estimated value of these is placed at $558,066.60.

Ever since the bank closed, its former president, Wade H. Cooper, has been trying through court action to force the Government to reopen the bank as a going concern, but courts so far have upheld the position of the Government in liquidating the bank.

New York, July 16 (AP).—Dried fruits steady, unchanged.

The Market By Carlton A. Shively

A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Irregular in Less Active Trading; Government Bonds Under Pressure; Wheat Strong.

New York, July 16.—With greatly reduced activity the stock market turned irregular after a day of fits and starts. Prices in some groups were near their best at the close and in others the strength of the morning was followed by weakness. Stock turnover was around 1,500,000 shares. September wheat closed 1⅛ cents higher at 105⅞ cents.

Some of the recent stock leaders looked rather heavy, but others maintained a buoyant tone. Chemicals were uniformly higher. Allied led the group into higher ground with a gain of more than 3 points to the best price in several years. Air Reduction advanced more than 2 points to its highest price on record before profit taking cut into the gains. Du Pont held steady.

Steels had some good performers. Youngstown rose to a new high price, but Bethlehem, Inland and U. S. Steel weakened. Utilities were less active. Telephone gave up a point on perhaps too much display of the splendid expansion in earnings, and the obvious nervousness lest that fact should reach the eyes of the authorities. Consolidated Edison dropped a fraction. North American recovered an early loss.

Railroad issues were irregular. Higher prices were paid for Delaware & Hudson, Nickel Plate and Jersey Central. New York Central, Santa Fe and Union Pacific fell, and Norfolk & Western tumbled 6 points on two sales. Motor shares worked lower, as did mail orders, metals and farm implements.

Foreign currencies again were dull and narrow. With a damper put on speculation in foreign currencies in most countries and with steps taken to prevent export of capital, the pressure on francs has been lifted. Moreover, the season is approaching for trade sales of sterling, which automatically should help the franc. Guilders, on the other hand, turned heavy.

Business Expands.

It was anticipated that second-quarter earnings reports would be favorable enough to help sustain the stock market, and that it turning out to be the case. Nearly a score of reports have been published and the combined gain over the corresponding period of last year amounts to nearly 15 per cent. Most likely when the larger corporations, such as Steel and General Motors, show their reports the percentage gain will be considerably increased.

Cheerfulness aroused over the improvement in business earnings would be much greater and the effect on the stock market more pronounced were it not for the plain fact that earnings are not keeping pace with the increase in volume of business done. If the narrowing spread between gross earnings and net profit were solely accounted for by higher wages, no one would worry much. Expenses are rising from many other directions, and the greatest unknown element now is that of the tax, of which corporations have to face four or five new varieties.

However disappointing may be the slow rise in earnings to the corporation stockholder, who has gone through some lean years, the experience of the principal corporations shows that business activity continues to expand. That is the main thing, for it means rising employment all along the line. It will continue if too many barriers are not placed in the road by political claptrapists.

Treasury Expenditures.

Recent daily statements disclose that the Treasury has deposited in its checking accounts in the Federal Reserve banks $65,000,000 more gold certificates issued against its free gold, which now appears to have been reduced to less than $100,000,000, making allowance for the items against which a certain portion of the gold in the general fund has been earmarked. In view of the Treasury's present unwillingness to borrow and the rapidity of its recent rate of expenditure, it is not unlikely that a call may be issued one of these days upon balances in member banks which have not been checked against since February. Such balances were $1,138,000,000 on July 10.

Tax Reductions.

In sending its letter to corporations suggesting that, in publishing interim earnings statements, no estimate of the new surtax on undistributed profits need be made, the stock exchange is trying to keep the reports on a uniform basis. It recognizes the impossibility of correct estimates, in advance of settled policy with respect to dividend distributions, and without a hint that no estimate be made, much confusion and certainly delay would result in publishing the reports. However, the security holder will find that the new taxes pour a lot of guesswork into his mixture. So-called net earnings from now on will be only approximate. One thing will be sure for the security holder. Taxes for his corporations and for himself will be higher and higher.

Rock Island.

Rock Island, a plan for the reorganization of which has just been filed with the court, is the road which in 1927 began common stock dividends at a $5 a share yearly rate, increased it to $6 in the following year, and to $7 in the next. In 1931 the rate was cut to a $5 yearly basis and dividends were discontinued with $1 a share as a last payment in June, 1931, which added to the deficit. Memory of the many millions paid to holders of common stock in a few flush years when the road profited from special oil revenues, and the millions laid out in depression times merely to keep things going doubtless will rankle in the breasts of the bondholders who now are being asked to give up nearly everything while the stockholders make virtually no sacrifice of anything they now own. Neither the Rock Island nor the Frisco in the past 25 years at least ever has been in a position to warrant enrichment of the stockholders by placing bondholders in jeopardy.

Sacrifice.

There is no question of the authorship of the reorganization plan for the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific. Like others filed by carriers under section 77, it is clearly a stockholders' plan. Although fixed interest charges are virtually wiped out—as they must be when earnings are insufficient to cover operating expenses before interest—the directors remark that "it should not be necessary to require too great a sacrifice on the part of the stockholders." Present stock issues of $129,000,000 par value would be exchanged for new shares of $65,405,253 par, plus option warrants. The creditors would get some stock, including common in settlement of unpaid interest. However agreeable this might be, it seems optimistic to expect a plan to take effect by January 1.

SEC Reveals Larger Holders In Corporations

194-Page Summary Lists Owners of Nearly Half a Billion Shares.

The Securities and Exchange Commission announced yesterday the publication of the "official summary of holdings of officers, directors and principal stockholders," as reported to the commission under the requirements of the Securities Exchange act of 1934. The summary constitutes a base-book of the holdings of equity securities in their own corporations reported as of December 31, 1935, by officers, directors and principal stockholders of 1,755 corporations having securities registered on national securities exchanges. The volume, covering 194 pages, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, United States Government Printing Office.

About 21,500 holdings are shown for approximately 458,000,000 shares. Of this total, about 408,000,000 shares were owned directly by the person reporting. The balance of about 50,000,000 shares were held indirectly, but this figure contained duplications estimated at about 25,000,000 shares, to give an unduplicated total of about 435,000,000 shares or approximately 21½ per cent of the total number of shares of the 1,755 corporations to which the reports apply. Only 260 positions in bond issues, with an aggregate principal amount of about $39,000,000, were reported.

The base-book, therefore, shows in detail the ownership of more than one-fifth of a large segment of the corporate wealth of the United States as represented by companies having securities listed on national securities exchanges.

Average Holdings.

Only approximately 21 per cent of total direct holdings of over 408,000,000 shares were reported by officers and directors who were not at the same time principal stockholders in their corporation. The average holding per security position was about 3,900 shares, ranging from 2,300 shares for officers to 3,300 shares for directors, and 6,400 shares for persons who combined the functions of officer and director. Officers and directors who at the same time were principal stockholders in their corporation reported total direct holdings of about 26,000,000 shares, or an average of about 75,000 shares for each of the 344 security positions of this type.

Over 17,200,000 shares were covered by the 463 reports of security positions held by persons who were principal stockholders but were not connected as officers, directors or trustees. The average per security position report of this type was about 37,000 shares.

The great majority of all reported direct holdings—about 278,700,000 shares, or 68 per cent of the total, were held by corporate principal stockholders and represent 932 security positions, an average of about 300,000 shares per position. (A corporate principal stockholder is a corporation holding 10 per cent or more of an equity security of another corporation.)

Of the total reported by this group, 1,907,000 shares were held by seven foundations; 3,429,000 shares were reported by 16 banks and insurance companies; and 21,274,000 shares were held by 18 management investment trusts, of which 19,222,000 represented the shares of other management investment trusts.

The remaining approximately 253,000,000 shares were reported by other corporations and represented in the majority the holdings of subsidiary companies by parent holding companies.

These figures, to a certain extent, indicate the degree of inter-corporate ownership existing among the 1,755 corporations. They show that on the aggregate, about 14 per cent of the number of shares of these corporations was owned by another corporation or by other corporations, while only about 6½ per cent was owned by officers, directors, or individual principal stockholders.

Bank Status Held Best in 7 Years

New York, July 16.—"Midyear bank statements indicate the most favorable position of bank stocks in seven years," Hoit, Rose & Trostler state in a survey of New York City bank statements as of June 30.

"Credit expansion is taking hold," according to the firm; "the call money rate has increased ¾ of 1 per cent since last fall; earnings leverage is high, at very low cost of deposits; recoveries are increasing; preferred stocks and capital notes are being retired or refunded, and dividend yields and appreciation possibilities are attractive. This combination of features leads us to say: Bank on the bank stocks!"

Standard of N.J. Orders 8 Ships At $13,000,000

Tank Contract Largest Ever Given in U. S. by Private Concern.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 16.—The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey announced today that it had ordered the immediate construction of eight oil tankers at a cost of more than $13,000,000. The contracts, signed today, the company said, comprise the largest ship-building order ever given by a private concern in the United States. In making the announcement, Robert Hague, general manager of the company's marine department, said:

"This is more than a gesture of confidence in the future of the United States and of the oil industry."

Contracts for four of the ships were given to the Federal Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., for construction at Kearny, N. J. The Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation received contracts for two, to be built at Sparrows Point, Md. The other two contracts were awarded the Sun Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., for its plant at Chester, Pa.

Construction of the eight vessels will require more than 7,000,000 man-hours of labor, including the work required in fabricating the materials with that of the final assembly, the company said. The eight new ships will be used in coastwise service to replace a slightly larger tonnage now approaching obsolescence. The company's fleet at present includes 65 tankers under American registry and 82 under foreign flags.

The new tankers will range from 12,800 to 13,000 tons deadweight each. Specifications call for all fireproof construction, including furniture and fittings. They will be single-screw ships with 12 knots speed.

Kennedy Urges Drastic Shifts In Paramount

Talk of Pay Cut for Stars Mere Pious Gesture, Says Former SEC Head.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 16.—Hitting extravagant spending in the motion picture industry, a report by Joseph P. Kennedy on Paramount Pictures, Inc., made public today, said the company's affairs were at a crisis and called for a "drastic" revision of management. The former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission submitted the report to directors before some recent changes in management were announced.

"No matter that 5 per cent of all pictures will fall far short of the total predicted by the ruthless spending producer," he said, "the fact that ace producers of the industry spend from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 on a big job is the yardstick for every small producer in the industry, most of whom never have and probably never can produce a box-office hit, regardless of expenditures."

The report pointed out that ever since the picture, "Four Horsemen," booked over $4,000,000, "producers have justified growing costs of making pictures by trying for another 'Horsemen'."

For executives, Kennedy suggested Paramount try "the salary bonus basis of compensation so happily employed in the motor industry."

"It is doubtful if executives can justify their salaries, but it is certain that the salaries paid to actors are to compensate for peculiar talents which cannot be recruited at will or pleasure," he added characterizing talk of lower salaries for movie stars as "mere pious gestures" while there is "intense and uncontrollable competition" for serves of players.

Kennedy, once in the management end of the movie industry himself, recommended "drastic and courageous revision of management" of Paramount and election as president of a man of "outstanding reputation from the industry—a picture man."

The directors, it was said, had in their hands Kennedy's report when Barney Balaban, Chicago, a Midwest theater operator and long a prominent figure in the industry, recently, was named head of Paramount to succeeed J. E. Otterson.

Girl Is Stabbed, Shot to Death In Hotel Room

Visitor to Asheville, N. C., Believed Victim of Attempted Attack.

By the Associated Press.

Asheville, N. C., July 16.—A physician today said Helen Clevenger, 19, of Great Kills, Staten Island, N. Y., found shot and stabbed to death in her hotel room here today, apparently was the victim of an attempted attack.

The physician declined to say positively, but asserted "indications" were that her attacker had attempted to assault her before shooting her in the breast and stabbing her in the face.

The body was found about 8 a. m. by her uncle, Prof. W. L. Clevenger, of Raleigh, who had a room just around the corridor.

The management reported a guest in the room directly under Miss Clevenger's telephoned the desk about 1 a. m., during a heavy electrical storm, that a woman was screaming upstairs.

T. Carl Scroggs, clerk, said he sent Daniel H. Gaddy to investigate, receiving a report that all was quiet outside the girl's room.

Two other persons reported they saw a man race across the hotel lobby during the storm, pass through the door and leap a railing to the sidewalk.

The girl's body, when found, was clad only in pajamas.

Clevenger has been connected with North Carolina State College about 10 years, and his brother for three.

Test Case

authority to extend its protection service to the puzzling domain.

"I hope this test case decides something," he said. "In the past when we have made arrests in 'no man's land' the U. S. Commissioner in Alexandria, Barton Phillips, has thrown them out for want of jurisdiction."

The arrest yesterday by Mast was the first one to be made since the signs were installed. The case is being brought into local courts, rather than before Commissioner Phillips, because the alleged offense occurred on a road which is maintained by the District.

This anomalous situation, whereby the District Government maintains the Virginia approach to Highway Bridge for the length of almost a half-mile, but does not protect it, is only one of many which make "no man's land" a thorn in the side of Virginia, Arlington County, District and Federal authorities.

A short time ago a man was seriously injured in an assault that occurred on a houseboat anchored in the airport basin, which is in the disputed territory. Haled into Washington Police Court, his assailant was liberated because of the jurisdictional tangle.

The controversy thrust itself conspicuously forward since April, 1930, when the body of Mary Baker, whose murder has never been solved, was found on Military road near Arlington Cemetery. This road, which meets Route No. 1 just below Highway Bridge, runs through the heart of "no man's land."

Since then there have been numerous auto accidents and assaults in the vicinity over which Metropolitan Police, Park Police, military police and Virginia and Arlington County authorities have disclaimed jurisdiction.

Congress failed to act on the report of the Virginia-District of Columbia Boundary Commission which was submitted last spring after almost two years' penetrating study. The greater part of the area in dispute would be turned over to Virginia if the report were ratified.

Maryland Governor Guest at Fort Washington

Gov. Harry Nice of Maryland, left, sits with Robert H. Luckett, president of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce, center, and Gov. George Peery of Virginia at the chamber's annual picnic outing at Fort Washington yesterday.

Peery and Nice Feted at Party By Chamber

Virginia and Maryland Governors Guests of Alexandrians.

The Governor of Maryland shook hands yesterday with the Governor of Virginia on the Maryland side of the Potomac, where he was entertained by 300 Virginia hosts—members of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce.

Gov. George Peery and Gov. Harry W. Nice were honor guests at the annual outing of the Chamber of Commerce. The business men steamed down the Potomac from Alexandria on the Army steamboat General Rucker. With them was Gov. Peery.

Gov. Nice motored to Fort Washington and was there to greet his hosts and the Governor.

Said Gov. Peery to Gov. Nice:

"Sorry to hear about the near-disaster you encountered on your boat trip this week."

Replied the Free State Chief Executive, turning to the business men and winking:

"You don't know anything about 'near-disaster' till you get to be Governor."

Gov. Nice was met at the fort's entrance by a guard of honor of the University of Maryland's R. O. T. C. Cadet Corp. A vanguard of Fort Washington soldiers greeted the boat.

Both Governors were introduced by R. S. Luckett, chairman of the Chamber of Commerce. The two made informal speeches.

Afterward, a picnic supper was served in the Sylvan Theater of the fort, and the group steamed down the river for an evening's ride.

Rites Tomorrow For Dr. Weaver

Mrs. Creighton

led to exhumation of Mrs. Applegate's body and an autopsy. Large quantities of poison were found in the vital organs.

During the investigation, Ruth told of being intimate with Creighton, whom she called "Uncle."

Mrs. Creighton had refused food for 24 hours before the execution. She lay on her death cell cot trembling and whimpering and pleading that her legs were paralyzed.

Her last hope to escape the chair faded last night when a commission of four physicians and Gov. Herbert H. Lehman's personal counsel reported to the chief executive that the woman was organically sound, that her mind was clear and that in their opinion she was guilty of "conscious malingering" when she claimed to be paralyzed.

The Applegates and the Creightons met nearly three years ago at an American Legion party. Applegate formerly was commander of a legion post.

At this party there began the strange chain of events that was to lead to the electric chair. Mrs. Creighton said that, influenced by "too many drinks," she revealed to Applegate that 12 years ago she had poisoned her brother, Raymond Avery, because he was a cripple. She was tried for murder in Newark, N. J., and was acquitted as she had been two years previously for the poison death of her mother-in-law.

Applegate used this knowledge, she said, to induce the Creightons to move into his home. There she was intimate with him until he was attracted to Ruth. When Mrs. Applegate learned of her husband's relations with the pretty child, she threatened to reveal the affair to her neighbors and lodge associates, Mrs. Creighton said.

Applegate, tired of his unlovely wife anyway, decided to kill her, Mrs. Creighton said.

Owners Facing Dog-Tag Cases; Drive Spurred

Number of Arrests Drops; Two Persons Bitten in Takoma Park.

Montgomery County police continued their drive against tagless dogs yesterday and summonses to appear in County Police Court were served on more than a score of owners.

A sharp drop in the number of persons arrested followed the rush to the county buildings for dog tags by delinquent dog owners. News of the arrests of neighbors and the prospect of a $25 fine for failure to obtain the licenses spread rapidly through the suburban communities and several hundred dog licenses were issued yesterday at Bethesda and Silver Spring.

Two persons were bitten yesterday in Takoma Park by stray dogs. One dog was captured and is under observation while the other escaped.

Calvin Whitehead, 13, of 214 Allegany avenue, Takoma Park, Md. was bitten by the dog that escaped. David Garrett, of 6806 Laurel street northwest, Takoma Park, D. C., was bitten on the legs and arms by another dog while roller skating on Laurel avenue. The dog knocked the boy to the street. Both were treated by Dr. William A. Shannon, of Takoma Park.

Takoma Park police issued a warning last night that all dogs without tags would be picked up and the owners would have to pay additional costs as well as a possible fine if the dog had not been provided with a tag.

Dry Cleaning Plant Official Is Missing After Argument

His life threatened by a colored employe with whom he had an argument Wednesday, Robert L. Gittings, 22, of Kensington, Md., has not been heard from or seen since he called his wife at 8 p. m. Wednesday.

Gittings, an overseer in a dry-cleaning establishment in the 1900 block New York avenue northeast, is reported to have had an argument with the colored man and the man left saying, "I will get you tonight."

According to relatives of Gittings, he continued to work until 8 p. m. when he called his wife and told her he was going to a newspaper office with some advertising copy and that he would be right home.

Mrs. Grace Gittings, wife of the missing man, told police there is no record of him ever arriving at the newspaper office and he never arrived at his home, 29 East Washington street.

After the disappearance of the man was reported, Inspector Bernard V. Thompson said he would assign detectives to the case. The colored man will be sought and questioned, Thompson said.
